Political Corporations and Tammany.

CHAPTER II.

A resolute, earnest man can do a great deal alone; but co-operative action has a power vastly beyond the increase of numbers. Fifty soldiers acting in concert will be more effective than five hundred acting without concert; ten thinkers agreeing together to disseminate a precise thing will produce a greater change in public opinion than a hundred men of equal capacity writing and speaking with no common aims on the same subject. This vast power of co-operative numbers is at the basis of all armies, all commercial association, all political parties, and all the moral and religious organizations of the world. When to this power are added the element of perpetuity, and the capacity of acting by a majority, so that the will of individuals is merged in the will of prevailing numbers, and death does not defeat the work or divide the councils, we have the mighty, enduring, ever vital and active organizations that have swayed the world. Such elements make monastic orders, churches of every sect, political aristocracies, stupendous stock companies that subjugate ancient empires, cover the ocean with ships and the land with railroads and manufactures. And without such elements, the vast Bible, mission, tract, and other humane associations, whose influence is felt in every quarter of the globe, would be impossible.

To these bodies, with the power of taking and holding property, and with undying life, we give the name of corporations. No individual or number of individuals can make one of them, without the consent and aid of the State. The laws of every country declare the subjects and conditions in reference to which one of these corporate bodies may be formed. The power of such bodies may be so abused, there is such peril in the presence of endless life and indefinite capacity for property and action, in the midst of short individual lives and means, that every State has to put clear limits to the objects, methods and dimensions of all kinds of corporations. An individual may be a marriage broker, a quack doctor, a grog-shop keeper, a procurer of political nominations and offices, a legislative lobbyist, the leader of a political ring, or a pot-house brawler; but no Government has ever yet been vile or foolish enough to permit a law under which corporations could be formed having for their avowed object to increase the numbers and influence of individuals devoting themselves to either of those pursuits. The proposal of a law for the creation of corporations, having for their object the propagation of groggeries, the procuring of political offices, the care of the funds, and increase of the power of legislative lobbyists, would shock the moral sense of our people. Such emotion would be highly creditable to them; but it is not creditable to them that they have allowed such results to be attained, indirectly, by a stupendous corporation, which, created in the name and in the general sphere of benevolence, has imbibed the lowest spirit of mercenary politics, and usurping the qualities and shape of a huge, voracious, insatiable political Leviathan, has left its sphere, and come prowling and devouring into that of party politics. Before considering further what is to be done with this corporate monster, which has, in our system, the vices and power of the Jacobin Club and Jesuit College united, and which the people so fear and execrate, under the name of Tammany Hall, let us look a moment at some points of principle and policy.

This country is dotted all over with corporations relating to education, benevolence, charity and religion, as well as to most branches of reputable business, and their influence is immense and generally beneficent. We have, however, only a single party corporation; and of this the sole business is the trade of politics; the end, public patronage and spoils, and the dividends, public offices, sinecure places, and shares in the pillage of the treasury of the people. Its fame, however, is infamous all over the world, and its managers have been able to achieve the united renown of brigand chiefs, municipal robbers, and unexampled demagogues. There is no legal authority or precedent for such a corporation; and its very existence is not less a fraud than are its policy and its management. The laws of this State have never yet provided for party corporations. Here arises an interesting and important question. May not the good of corporate action be applied to politics, and its evils be at the same time avoided? I think such legislation is easy, and that it is one of the first duties of the present session. It seems to me a poor account of our political wisdom, that we have thus far allowed politics to suffer all the evils of corporate action, and have secured to political life none of its wholesome effects. There has been something both painful and ludicrous in the short-sighted simplicity with which the war of public indignation and wrath has been waged against the measures and the rascality, the present officers, the bribed hirelings and the deluded rascals of the great Tammany corporation, while no one appears to have seen that the real power was the political corporation itself, or that the only effectual blow must be one that should knock all the political life out of that old corporate body of benevolence into which such life had stolen. It seems not to have been considered that to strike down the present officers is not to kill a corporation, nor even to curtail its funds, or close its hall for future mischief. The danger is in the perpetual corporate life, the constant funds and the living self-propagating power and spirit of political mischief, after all living managers are hurled down or sent to prison. The bull in the ring, plunging at the red flag, and not at him whose other hand bears a deadly sword; the besiegers who should smash all the balls as they fall, but never attack the citadel from which they come, might be taken as fair illustrations of the measures proposed for abating the evil of this unparalleled corporation. The corporation itself is the source of the evils, and everything else—acts, agents, methods, corruption funds—are but the consequences. The nuisance itself is what needs to be abated. Now, I am far from advising that the Tammany charter be repealed. I am opposed to all acts of political retaliation or vindictiveness. Every party, when in power, and especially a party claiming high regard for the highest public opinion, must do as it would be done by, and only act in that wise and deliberate manner which is consistent with a regard for justice and the public welfare.

Besides, I am convinced that there is a useful field for enlarging the influence of political ideas, and disseminating political knowledge by the aid of corporations, which has not yet been occupied, and which we ought at once to improve. All parties and every class of political thinkers must be allowed equal opportunities of corporate organization and action in this field. Their counterbalancing influence will be the public safety. The satanic spirits that sustain Tammany must have as fair a field as the very saints of politics; but when there are no chances for spoils, and when the wholesome barriers I propose shall hedge in the corporate activities of traders in politics, it is more than possible that such spirits will find no attractions or profit in political corporations.

Let us now see what sort of political corporations we need and will be safe. A part of our political evils is the party bias and hate that prevent tens of thousands of our citizens from reading but more than one side of political questions. Honest poor men, willing to know the truth, have no means of reaching it. Only intense, mercenary, party journals reach them. There are many important political subjects—such as the effects of the Registry laws, compulsory attendance upon the schools, the sanitary laws, the evils of a low Judiciary, the bad effects of too frequent elections, the theory and effect of the license system, the advantages of a high standard of civil service, the abuses of City Government, and others too numerous to mention—upon which the people need and would be glad to receive candid political instruction. We have no organized means of imparting it, except political parties, which are not candid and only present one side; and we have no corporate agency for such purpose, but the Tammany Society, which has sunk far beneath the level of ordinary party morality. Single individuals cannot establish the means of any permanent political instruction, and we have no laws for the formation of corporations for the diffusion of political knowledge, and every one must admit such knowledge is most desirable. The nearest approach to such corporations are those found under the act authorizing corporations for charity and benevolence. There can be no question that the rule of parties is far too stringent, and that political education and thought are sadly neglected. There is among us too great power in mere numbers, and too little in political ideas. It is also very clear that the instructions I have mentioned as so desirable would give increased strength to the great party which most regards the highest standard of public duty, and would steadily undermine that party which pays most deference to the demands of ignorance, bigotry, and all the influences of vice and villiany. There are in our community men of wealth and public spirit who would make generous contributions of money, time and thought for the diffusion of sound political knowledge, if the work could be carried on by the aid of well-organized corporations. The Corn Law League, the anti-slavery societies, are striking examples on a larger scale of what might be done. Let us, then, learn from the abuses of an unlimited political corporation, and from all the phenomena of these strange times, how to restrain what is evil and enforce what is good, through corporate political action in the sphere of politics. It does not seem to me difficult to sketch the outlines of such a method. It seems clear that no such corporation should be allowed to make a trade of party nominations, and that no ambitious demagogue should use the aid of such a body to advance himself to an office, or to gain a fee by bartering the corporate influence to any other demagogue. Equally plain, I think it to be, that no such corporation should be allowed to make itself a mere piece of party machinery, or to control great halls where only one side of a political question is heard, and only one class of political opinion is allowed admission. No less certain it is that the laws of the State should not be used to give vigor and endless life to bodies which are to use their power for the secret production and dissemination of a pestiferous partisan literature in the interests of its favorite political jobbers, and for the deception and control of the ignorant and bigoted in a city rabble. It is bad enough that private individuals must be allowed to do such things. These views suggest that it is not only an act of justice, but of public duty, that the powers and practices of Tammany should be greatly curtailed, and that all the provisions hereafter suggested should be applied to that and the other political corporations hereinafter provided for.

There should, in view of these considerations, be enacted at this session a law authorizing the foundation of corporations for the "Diffusion of Political Knowledge," which should contain the following essential provisions:

1. That any number of citizens of this State, not less than five nor exceeding fifty, may sign articles of association, and upon any three of them making oath that the same are for the purposes of this act, and with the intents of pursuing its objects as a corporation, and the intended place of such corporate business, any Judge of the Supreme Court, being satisfied that the same are in conformity to this act, shall indorse his approval, and order the same to be filed with the clerk of the county where such corporation is to be located; and the clerk of such county shall file the same, and certify a copy to be filed with the Secretary of State. Thereafter such persons, being organized, shall be a political corporation, and have the general powers of corporations.

2. The objects of such corporation shall be the "Diffusion of Political Knowledge," and the promotion of the discharge of the duties of citizens.

3. A vote of three-fourths of the corporators may, at a regular meeting, elect new members, who shall be corporators on signing the list of corporators.

4. Such corporators shall keep full records of their proceedings, and the same shall be open at all times to the examination of the Governor, the Attorney-General and the State Senators respectively.

5. The officers of such a corporation shall be a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Treasurer, Secretary and an Executive Committee, to be elected by the corporators, who alone can vote on any question. The several persons so elected shall be called corporate officers, and a list of them and of the names of all corporators and of all political missionaries and agents employed by the corporation shall be annually filed by the Secretary, under his oath, in the office of said county clerk, and the same shall be open at proper times to public inspection.

6. No such corporate officer shall accept any nomination for a public office or hold any such public office while such corporate officer.

7. Such corporation may publish and distribute books, pamphlets and papers on political subjects, and may employ and pay political missionaries for their distribution, and to influence citizens to the discharge of their political duties.

8. Neither such corporations, nor any of its officers, shall take any part in making any political nominations, nor shall any meeting for such purpose be held in any place, hall or room belonging to or under the control of such corporation. Nor shall any meeting held in any such place, hall or room, for any political purpose, (to which any persons but such corporators whose names are so filed are admitted,) unless such meeting is freely open to the public, irrespective of party, creed or race.

9. No such corporation shall own or hold real estate beyond the value of $250,000, nor beyond the reasonable amount required for the discharge of the legitimate purposes of such corporation, as herein defined, nor shall any such corporation own personal property, (aside from current subscriptions,) from devisees or other sources, of which the annual income shall exceed $25,000.

10. Every such corporation shall cause three copies of every book, pamphlet and paper which it shall aid in circulating to be promptly filed in the State Library, and shall also file annually with the Secretary of State a report, under the oath of its Treasurer, of all money received and paid out, and for what purpose, and a statement, under the oath of its Secretary, of all publications circulated during the past year.

11. The corporation known as the Tammany Society, (correctly specifying its true name,) in the City of New-York, is hereby declared to be a corporation under this act, and such Society and its officers are declared to be subject to all the conditions, limitations, duties and disqualifications herein specified, as effectually as if the said Society had been formed as a corporation under this act. And said Society shall hereafter be limited to the objects, and governed and conducted as a corporation hereunder.

12. There should be proper penalties to enforce these provisions, and the right of suit for them should be given to any citizen.

I am satisfied that corporations of great public usefulness would be formed under such a law, and that large funds would be used to elevate the political education of the people. Provisions like the foregoing would prevent such bodies being secretly debased to private and mercenary ends under the name of party and the pretense of the public good. The people would always know what they did, what books and other writings they circulated, and who were the persons thus engaged. The secret deception and private pillage of Tammany Hall would be impossible. The persons allowed to be employed as political missionaries would be well known, as would all the books and papers they should circulate. I believe they would be a great gain upon the vile and secret runners and repeaters which Tammany has employed, and which every secret and unrestrained political corporation would employ. I am sure we have public-spirited men of fortune who would be glad to give of their abundance to disseminate among the honest poor brief, well-written tracts upon the interests and duties of good citizens. These corporations would be agencies of public enlightenment, and not organizations to enable ignorance and rowdyism to rule under the guidance of priests and demagogues. For men of public spirit and unselfish aims, they would have great attraction, but political jobbers and rowdy rascals would find them neither interesting nor profitable. If the leaders of the political majority in the City really wish to weaken the power of the vile, and to increase the influence of the worthy in the City, they can show it by consenting that the great corporation of political iniquity be reduced to the safe proportions and methods under which we have seen that honest men can organize for honest political influence. Those who hope to see that mighty power revived, under their own control, and all its perverted franchises again exerted, without a corporate rival for the selfish interests of party, will of course oppose all these suggestions. They know that one night devoted to the cunning work of resignations and elections will give it an official force personally unimpeachable; and their opposition to the views herein expressed will best show how highly they prize its unrestrained powers for the purposes of selfish and personal politics.

They will struggle to make that old haunt once more a place where rowdy rabbles shall listen to low party appeals; where ignorance, bigotry, grog-shop keepers and gamblers (the tools of the Rings and the wholesale traders in public corruption) can be taught the lowest lessons of partisanship, and drilled to the most detestable duties of hirelings. That vast hall stands ready to receive its accustomed barbarians. There are among its familiar officials those expert in all the crafts of party scoundrelism; large funds are ready for the uses of political corruption; the same intrigues and secresy which of old made its methods effective, may be repeated; its corporate life and organized activity endure to overpower and to outlive all individual efforts. There are traitors in the City minority still anxious to be bought, and even this fiery ordeal of public wrath will not strike down all the great public robbers of the City majority who are anxious to buy such traitors.

There are on the other hand, among the leaders of the City majority honorable men, who want no such persuasions and facilities for secret and mercenary partisan intrigue as such an unrestrained corporation affords. They know that the same means that destroyed their own influence in Tammany, and gave control to knaves, would quickly accomplish the same iniquity again. They know that no virtue in that corporation, no ability in themselves, nothing short of a high moral influence from without, aroused by the most non-partisan of their political opponents, and only aided in their own party when that new power seemed to lead on to victory, could have given the better men of the City majority another chance to drive the Tammany Pegasus even for a space. As the rascality and ignorance of the majority will follow the worst of its leaders, the people may well look to the fate of Tammany as a foretaste of the future politics of the City majority. We shall soon see whether the leadership of that majority is to be guided in the spirit of its lowest or of its highest elements; whether the accepted leaders of this crisis will call their party up to the level of the public well-being, or will prefer to go down themselves into the quagmires after party majorities.

If Tammany is allowed to be raised as the sole political corporation, with no such limits to its action as I have suggested, or if the public virtue of the country is not given equal means of corporate action, such folly and blindness will be exhibited as will be sad to contemplate and long lamented. One act of legislative foresight and duty now may send a foul spirit to the shade, and call to life many angels of light.

OUR STATE INSTITUTIONS---XXI.

Lockport.

LOCKPORT, Saturday, Jan. 20, 1871.

This city is essentially a child of the Erie Canal. As the train from Niagara Falls slackens its speed before crossing the canal bridge on approaching the Lockport station, the eye is at once attracted by a sort of giant's staircase in the Erie Canal of even more imposing dimensions than the celebrated Giant's Staircase in the Doge's Palace at Venice. Immediately the exclamation involuntarily escapes one: "Ah! *Lock*port! I see." It is at this point that, by an extensive system of lockage, the heavily-laden barges are enabled to ascend and descend the low range of hills down which the canal takes its course, and on the extreme edge of one of which stands the active little city of Lockport, looking over one of the most extensive level plains in the State of New-York. It was concerning the system of lockage at Lockport that that brilliant luminary of the Ring—Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS—succeeded, two years ago, in making such an ass of himself before the State Senatorial Committee on Canals, when he appeared as Secretary of the Commercial Union. The question of the scarcity of water above the Lockport level happened at the moment to be the immediate subject of investigation. What an opportunity for NATHANIEL to distinguish himself! In answer to a question put to him he made reply that it was easy enough to keep plenty of water on that level; for if they could lock water down, he could not see why they could not lock water up from below, and so have all the water they wanted. Poor SANDS! The Committee would, doubtless, have so far forgotten their Senatorial dignity as to laugh aloud at any one else propounding such a topsy-turvey theory. But, then, SANDS, you know—well, he is and always will be SANDS. It is, perhaps, needless to say that the Committee took no action whatever on Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS' extraordinary suggestion, but turned their attention to the consideration of the views of more sensible and practical men on this much-vexed question.

This problem of locks and water levels, however, involving, as it does, the high cost and the prevention of the increase of transportation, is still unsolved, and the shippers of Buffalo, Syracuse, and other cities on the canal, are unsparing in their anathemas, especially against the locks. They complain of the charges the boatmen make for transporting lumber, grain, &c., to New-York, but admit that they are barely sufficient to allow the boatmen to live. They demand that the locks shall be increased at least one-third in length, so as to permit the passage of boats large enough to warrant the expenditure of building them as propellers. They claim that these larger boats would require no more hands to manage them than the smaller boats, and that the lessening of the duration of the voyage to New-York, and the extra remuneration from the extra cargo, would enable the boatmen to make much more money at rates which shippers would consider perfectly fair. Of course, this theory is indirectly an assertion that the want of profit on shipping grain and lumber to New-York is simply owing to high transportation charges and not to competition and underselling. Should the locks be enlarged and transportation be increased, there is nothing to prevent an equivalent fall in prices in the New-York grain market, unless it should turn out that the new system would place the Buffalo shippers in a position to ship grain with a profit at the same or lower prices than shippers elsewhere are now charging, and below which they cannot afford to go.

This may possibly be the case. But it would not be cheering to find out that it was not, after having gone to an enormous expense in enlarging the locks all along the canal. It might put the lake shippers in a worse position than ever by adding an increased State canal toll to their present burdens. They would then be like the dog in Æsop's fables, who dropped his piece of meat in the water while snatching at its reflection. Still, this question of the locks will have to be seriously discussed, not only in the interest of the shippers and boatmen, but also in the interest of consumers. The capacity of the canal to carry the fast increasing supplies is one of the issues raised; and, whether that capacity admits of development by the enlarging of the locks. There are some who avow that it is not; but the general opinion seems to be overwhelmingly on the other side. This is to the public the most important phase of the whole question. Mr. G. S. HAZARD, the well-known grain shipper of Buffalo, tells me that the Erie Canal has capacity of prism sufficient to float twenty million tons to tide water during the time the canal is open, but that the disproportioned locks curtail the tonnage of the canal to three million of tons when going east. He says, that with an enlargement of the locks to a size commensurate with the prism of the canal, the tonnage of the boats could be increased from two hundred and fifty to six hundred tons. Then the price of freight, in consequence of the enlarged boat and the increase of cargo, would be reduced fifty per cent.; and the speed of the boat would, by the use of steam, be double that now attained by the system of towing by horse power. This arrangement would reduce the cost of transportation of grain from Buffalo to New-York at least five cents a bushel. Buffalo last year received nearly seventy million bushels of grain and flour. The enlarged locks and new boats, if really practicable, would have saved Buffalo $3,500,000 in that one year alone; a goodly sum toward the expense of enlarging the locks.

There are five double locks, ten in all, at Lockport, each lock being 110 feet long by 20 feet wide. They have a uniform rise of a little over 12 feet, making the total rise about 64 feet. The two head locks have 20 feet, the four lower tiers 18 feet of water. The time occupied in the passage of the boats from one lock to another varies according to their construction and running. Going east a boat will pass through all the locks in from fifteen to twenty-five minutes; going west more time is occupied, as the boats have to be pulled through by horse-power on a rising tow-path, instead of being forced through by the subsiding water, as is the case in going east. The boats have a tonnage of 200 to 240 tons, and going east generally carry about 7,500 bushels of grain, or from 140,000 to 170,000 feet of lumber. The rafts are composed of what are technically called cribs. There are generally six cribs, or about 70,000 feet (board measure) of lumber to a raft. The monthly lockages of boats going east and west, and rafts of lumber going east, average about 3,000. For the last season the figures are:

May	2,253
June	2,987
July	3,109
September	3,552
October	2,912
November (unusually heavy)	3,210
Total	18,023

There are no lock fees whatever, the State Government including all charges in the State toll of two cents per mile on the boat. Still there are what amount to charges, and it is against these demands that the boatmen call out so loudly. The lock officials will get a boat through in fifteen minutes or be half an hour about it, according to the receipt or refusal of a quarter of a dollar from the Captain of the boat. Considering the number of locks on the canal between Buffalo and Albany these black-mailings become quite a serious tax, and, when refused, involve a still more serious loss—the loss of time.

The great manufacturing feature of Lockport is the Holly Water-works Company. This system of supplying cities with water has several peculiar features about it, and appears to me to be very far superior to any other system in vogue. As far as I can judge, it seems to avoid every short-coming that water consumers have hitherto suffered from. Its main characteristics are the abolition of reservoirs and fire-engines, the sustention of a regular supply of water, an unerring uniformity of pressure, and a vastly increased protection against fire.

Mr. HOLLY'S plan is to place one or more, according to the amount of water to be supplied, of his powerful Elliptical Rotary Pumps within a frost-proof and fire-proof building, immediately at the source of supply, no matter how far away it may be from the city to be supplied. This effectually does away with reservoirs. He is now constructing works for Atlanta, Ga.; but the pumps are four miles from the city. He tells me that he could easily force water from Lockport to Buffalo; that it would only depend on the size of the pipes. The great loss of velocity in water occurs through the friction of the water against the pipe. The larger the pipes, of course, the less the friction. The rotary pump, too, is constantly revolving in one direction and keeps up an even and ceaseless pressure in the pipes. Not so the suction pump, which must of necessity force the water into the pipes in shoots. This again impairs the velocity. But the most interesting part of the system is that part of it which regulates the supply to the demand, and at the same time entirely does away with the necessity of fire-engines. The rotary pump is constructed of a sufficient power to force twice the ordinary supply of water through the pipes, if needs be; and the pump is governed in its action by a very ingenious piece of machinery—the hydrostatic water supply regulator—which regulates the supply of water to a varying amount on the same principle that a steam governor regulates the supply of steam to an unvarying amount. A sudden and rapid increase in the consumption of water, as, for instance, in case of fire, is instantly communicated to the governor, as surely as the nerves momentarily communicate the event of injury to the bodily extremities to the brain.

Mr. HOLLY places a double fire-hydrant to every block, the hose throwing a stream 100 feet high. The moment the hose is attached and the stream is turned on, the governor feels it and instantly calls on the engine to make ten more revolutions per minute, so as to keep up the regular supply. The engine obeys automatically. Should another fire occur at the same time the provident governor calls for another ten revolutions; and so on for half a dozen fires blazing at once in different parts of the city. But look at the loss of time, and thereby the probable destruction of property and life, which this arrangement saves! Most large warehouses have their own hose. In the event of fire, the hose has only to be attached, and the fire is out before the fire-engine has got well started on its way to the scene of conflagration. The hydrants are provided with a simple apparatus which drains all the water from them, so that they shall not freeze. Here is a basketful of advantages at once—putting aside the great question of protection from fire! No outlay for engines, engine-houses, and horses; fewer firemen to be paid; no chance of water giving out, or decreasing in volume in the extinguishing of large fires; and no chance of an accident to a fire-engine, which is of necessity very lightly built, from something giving way, or the running against an omnibus or the lamp-post in turning a corner. I cannot but think that Chicago would still be standing had she been furnished with the Holly system of water-works. I understand that the City Fathers of Chicago did once discuss the propriety and advisability of adopting it; but they unwisely resolved to be content with what they had, though fully recognizing the superiority of the Holly system. The Chicago works cost many millions, and entail a working expenditure of $390,000 a year. Mr. HOLLY says he will construct works which shall render another Chicago fire impossible for $1,000,000, and of which the working expenses shall be only $50,000 a year.

Mr. HOLLY'S system is being adopted in all parts of the Union. He has erected and is now erecting works at Lockport, Auburn, Ogdensburg, Batavia, Binghamton, Schenectady, Saratoga, Syracuse and Buffalo, in New-York State; at Minneapolis, Minn.; Columbus, Ind.; Des Moines, Iowa; Dayton, Ohio; Covington, Ky.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Jackson, Mich.; Denver, Col.; Atlanta, Ga.; Memphis, Tenn.; Norwalk, Conn., and seventeen other large cities. The works at Indianapolis have a capacity to supply six million gallons a day, and can throw ten or fifteen fire streams to the height of one hundred feet from hydrants in any part of the city. The works now building for Atlanta are to be located at Peach Tree Creek—the source of supply, and the water is to be forced, at the rate of three million gallons per day, through a main pipe four miles long, to the elevation of 375 feet, the elevation of Atlanta above Peach Tree Creek. Six fire streams are to be thrown from the hydrants to a height of eighty feet. The City of Buffalo adopted the Holly system after a careful and thorough investigation of its merits, as an auxiliary to their old water-works, and for the supply of that portion of the city above the level of the reservoir. The Holly Company agreed in their contract that, if the city would lay an independent main pipe through Main-street, a distance of over two miles, their machinery should throw six fire streams to a height of 100 feet from any point on the line. The supply for the City of Memphis is to be 5,000,000 gallons per day for domestic use and ten fire streams 100 feet high. The Company have lately made proposals to construct water-works for the City of New-Orleans. These will be on a larger scale than any works they have yet built. The greatest supply as yet furnished by their works to a single city is 250,000 gallons an hour; at New-Orleans they propose to furnish 420,000 gallons an hour—nearly 10,000,000 gallons a day. The works of the Holly Company are most extensive. They stand on the edge of the Erie Canal, immediately below the rocks, and consist of the main building of four floors, comprising three machine-shops and a pattern-shop, all 250 feet by 65 feet; a foundry, 110 by 60 feet; an erecting-shop, 100 by 60 feet; two wood-working shops, 60 by 50 feet; a boiler-shop, 70 feet square; two blacksmith-shops, 30 by 40 feet; and a wing of three floors, 80 by 40 feet, for offices, shipping, packing, &c. The Company begin the year with about three times as many contracts on hand as they had on Jan. 1, 1871. By the way, I am told that the insurance companies actually make a reduction on fire premiums in cities where these Holly Water-works are in use.

In close proximity to the Holly Water-works, is JAMES RICHMOND'S factory for the making of improved mill machinery. The machines most interesting and most valuable to the miller are the Empire Bran-duster and the Grain Cleaner and Separator. The Bran-duster is a large horizontal cylinder, rather larger at one end than at the other, and made of wire cloth, into which the bran is fed. A series of brushes, revolving rapidly in contact with the inner surface of the cylinder, keep the bran constantly working against the wire cloth, and force the flour which is in the bran through the meshes, the bran passing gradually out at the wider end of the cylinder. The saving of flour by one of these machines varies from five to ten per cent.—no inconsiderable item in a large mill. The Grain Separator consists of a double set of cast-steel sieves, ten in number, over which the grain passes, one after another. The wheat is fed into the machine through a suction-spout, where it is met by a strong upward current of air, regulated by a separate valve, which removes the screenings, light oats, chaff, &c., the dust and chaff being drawn into a fan and blown out of the machine, the screenings passing through a drop-spout. The wheat then passes on to a coarse sieve which removes bits of stick and straw and anything larger than a kernel of grain. Another set of sieves separates the oats from the wheat, and again another separates the cockle and other small seeds. From the sieves the wheat is carried to another sucker-spout, where, by means of a very strong current of air, all the light kernels are blown out. Thus the farmer can send his wheat to market in first rate condition and of uniform quality, and the miller who buys his wheat in the rough, can, by using this machine, be sure of the uniform quality of his flour.

But there is one point in connection with Mr. RICHMOND'S factory which to me was quite novel. He has a splendid water-power by using the waste waters of the canal, above the locks, the same as the Holly Water-works. The water enters a tunnel immediately above the upper tier of locks, and, after turning the heavy water-wheel of Mr. HOLLY'S and Mr. RICHMOND'S factories, returns into the canal below the lowest tier of locks. Mr. RICHMOND needs but a small portion of this water-power, and distributes the remainder, by means of endless wire cables on telegraph poles, to neighboring factories and mills. A very simple arrangement of cogs enables any number of endless wire cables to run to central points in the city, and thence in all directions. In this way the printing presses of the Journal, the Times, and the Union are run by deputy, at a cost of so much per hundred feet per annum. Mr. RICHMOND also furnishes power to a whip factory, a cabinet-shop, a glass factory, 2,500 feet away, a shirt factory 2,000 feet in the opposite direction, a foundry, and a machine-shop. He has some valuable patents in connection with this distribution of power, and has lately fitted up a series of distributing wires at Fulton, in Oswego County.

About half a mile from the locks, on either side of the canal, lie the Lockport quarries, owned by B. & I. CARPENTER. The stone is a gray limestone, very hard and yet easily worked, and, therefore, unusually suitable for building. The stone lies immediately beneath the surface, and extends on the north side for a quarter of a mile to a distance varying from 200 to 600 feet from the canal bank; on the south side of the canal the quarry is about half a mile long, with an almost uniform width of 200 feet. Last year about 30,000 tons of stone were blasted from the quarries; one blast alone setting out 31,050 cubic feet or 2,640 tons of stone. From the quarries the stone is carried by heavy traveling cranes and trucks to the saw-mills. The two mills together can saw one hundred tons of stone at a time. The blocks of stone are sawn into pieces so as to run three to a ton. They vary in weight from five to twenty tons; though not long since a block was cut up which weighed twenty-nine tons and was 14 by 11 feet, and 2 feet 3 inches in thickness. The stone is shipped in all directions. Last year four thousand tons of plain and carved stone were sent over the Erie Canal to New-York, and large quantities were sold to the local builders. Among many other large contracts, Mr. CARPENTER supplied the stone for the Manhattan Market and the Women's Hospital on Fiftieth-street, in New-York, and for the lake wall of Fort Niagara. He is at present furnishing the stone, plain, cut and carved, for the fine building which, when completed, is to contain the splendid library which Mr. LENNOX so munificently presented to the City of New-York about a year ago. The Chicago Court-house, which was destroyed in the earlier hours of the great fire, was built of stone taken from Mr. CARPENTER'S quarries. Below the bed of the lime-stone is a bed of water lime-stone, and on the top there is much very fine madropore. I saw some specimens of the madropore in Mr CARPENTER'S office which were worthy of a place in a museum.

One of the most important features, in a business point of view, of Lockport manufactures is the patent medicine known as the Gargling Oil. The word naturally leads one to suppose that it is a remedy for affections of the throat. But it is not. A misguided farmer out West, who was suffering from a severe cold and sore throat, was once attracted by the words Gargling Oil on the labels of a multitude of bottles in the window of the druggist of his market town. He jumped out of his box-wagon, bought a pint bottle, and, on his arrival at home, proceeded to gargle his throat. To use the technical brevity of the newspaper paragraph of the period, "He didn't eat much for some weeks after," though his wife, in her anxiety to save the bedroom carpet, on which he had spilled a lot of the nauseous stuff, forgot her sprained hand, and, in rubbing the carpet to get out the oil, rubbed the stuff into her hand and so cured it. The Gargling Oil is an embrocation compounded of essential oils, gums, some chemicals not to be named, and a large proportion of turpentine. No wonder our Western farmer did not find it palatable. The virtues of the compound were discovered by Dr MERCHANT, a graduated medical practitioner, in 1833, and he soon after began its manufacture in Lockport on a very limited scale. Though a patent medicine, it is not a quack medicine, unless a vast number of people annually make fools of themselves or imagine they have certain ills which human flesh is heir to and have them not. The modest business which Dr. MERCHANT started forty years ago is now a large and flourishing stock company, with one of the finest stone buildings in Lockport. Mr. HODGE, the manager and principal stockholder, tells me that they put up 6,000 bottles of the oil daily, in sizes varying from a quarter of a pint to a pint. The embrocation is largely used for horses as well as for human beings, and to judge from the Company's enormous advertising list, is sold in every nook and corner of the United States.

But Mr. HODGE'S creed is not confined to a religious and pecuniary faith in Gargling Oil. He also believes in doing something to advance the City of Lockport. He has just erected a splendid block of buildings adjoining his factory, which will really confer a benefit on his fellow townsmen. The façade is of grey limestone, from the Onondaga quarries, and the total cost of the building will be about $150,000. The ground floor will be divided into two portions, one-half being devoted to eight shops, and the other half to a post-office, telegraph office, &c., an arcade dividing them. The upper part of the building is to be the Lockport Opera-house, and will have accommodations for two thousand spectators. With the exception of some of the internal fittings, every thing is completed, and the youth and beauty of Lockport are looking anxiously forward to the opening day. A. P.

THE TICHBORNE CASE.

Resumption of the Proceedings—The Argument for the Defense.

From the Spectator, Jan. 13.

The Tichborne case reopened on Monday with the speech of the Attorney-General, Sir J. D. COLERIDGE, for the defense, which has been continued throughout the week, and had reached, up to last night, even in the somewhat compressed narrative of the Times, the gigantic length of sixty-six feet of print—eleven fathom. It has been, however, a very able speech, which has quite redeemed Sir J. D. COLERIDGE'S reputation at the Bar, somewhat endangered, as it was, by his ineffective cross-examination of the claimant, though he, perhaps, indulges too much in the figure of speech so important in dealing with juries—repetition—considering that the jury in this case has shown at least as much knowledge and judgment as the Bar, and a good deal more than the Bench. Sir J. D. COLERIDGE'S line has been to show that the real ROGER CHARLES TICHBORNE, though a young man with some failings and a certain propensity to drink, was a thorough gentleman at heart, utterly incapable of leading the life of a 'common Australian thief,' that his own instructions to Mr. SLAUGHTER for his will showed a complete knowledge of the family property and affairs before leaving England, of which the claimant has shown a complete ignorance; that he was a man of moderately intellectual interests and tastes—interested, for instance, in Molière—understanding his mother's weaknesses, and not indisposed to keep a certain control over her vagaries. Moreover, the real ROGER TICHBORNE was profoundly attached to his cousin, Miss DOUGHTY (now Mrs. RADCLIFFE), whom he hoped to marry on his return, having vowed to build a church to the Virgin if he did so within three years; was not once near TICHBORNE at the time assigned by the claimant to the asserted seduction, and had deposited his sealed instructions with Mr. BOSWOOD at a date long anterior to that assigned by the claimant to this fictitious outrage. On the other hand, the Attorney-General has labored to show that the claimant, while entirely ignorant of the most elementary facts relating to the Tichborne property and family, while sending a messenge to a grandfather who had long been dead, and begging for money in Australia, while he had a large balance at GLYN'S, has also shown a curiously minute knowledge of facts in connection with the ORTON family of which ROGER TICHBORNE must have been ignorant, having mentioned, for instance, to his Australian attorney the name of a ship—the Jessie Miller—in which ORTON went out to Australia long before TICHBORNE left England, and declared that he was for thirteen days a private soldier, instead of having been an officer in the Carabineers for three years. In fact, Sir J. D. COLERIDGE proposes to show, by a vast cumulation of evidence, that the claimant knew hardly anything that ROGER TICHBORNE must have known—especially how to spell his own name, and in what county Tichborne Park was situated—knew a great deal that ROGER TICHBORNE could not have known—and has sworn to some "three thousand" falsehoods, invented by himself to supply the deficiencies of his Tichborne knowledge. The speech has produced a profound impression—but when will it end? There is a point beyond which new arguments do not tend to strengthen belief.

The Livingstone Expedition.

The London Times says: "One of the members of the expedition now being organized by the Geographical Society for the relief of Dr. LIVINGSTONE will be a son of the traveler himself, Mr. W. OSWELL LIVINGSTONE, who was born twenty years ago in the neighborhood of Lake N'gami, as will be recollected by readers of LIVINGSTONE'S earlier adventures. The leader appointed is Lieut. LLEWELLYN DAWSON, of the Royal Navy, who distinguished himself in the difficult operation of the survey of the gorges and rapids of the Upper Yang-tze-Kiang in 1869, under Admiral Sir H. KEPPEL, and who has since done similar service in the River Plate. He will be supported by another officer; and an artisan and interpreter, to be engaged at Zanzibar, will complete the European portion of the party. An armed native escort of fifty picked men, besides porters, will be prepared in advance by Dr. KIRK, at Zanzibar. The party will leave England about the 2d of February, in the Abydos, a steamer chartered by Messrs. J. WISEMAN & Co. for the voyage to Zanzibar via the Suez Canal. The objects of the expedition are strictly to ascertain the whereabouts of Dr. LIVINGSTONE, who when last heard of was at Manakoso, on the shores of the rumored great lake of Manyema, west of Taganyika; to relieve him and bring him home, if living, or recover the papers containing the records of his discoveries if dead. It is announced that the subscriptions to defray the expenses of this promising expedition still fall short of the amount required, which, we are informed, is about £5,000."

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

A Russian Poem.

The literature of Russia is little known beyond the borders of that vast Empire, and that knowledge is chiefly confined to Germany. There is not, it is true, a great deal to be known, for Russia has no literary history like that of England or France, reaching far back through centuries, and her modern development has been far more material than that even of America. The Czars have always looked with suspicion upon men of letters, and have had few rewards for scholarship. The military career has offered almost the only path to distinction under their rule, and every other form of ambition has been held in check. This was true, at least, until the accession of the present Czar to power, under whose more enlightened and milder sway the arts of peace are beginning to assume greater importance throughout the Empire.

Brief as is the literary history of Russia, almost every chapter records a tragedy. Two of her greatest poets died a violent death. PUSCHKIN, at the age of thirty-seven, fell in a duel arising from an intrigue, soon after his return from banishment, in 1847. Four years later, LERMONTOFF, at the age of thirty, was killed in a duel while in banishment in the Caucasus. In 1842 KOLZOFF, a "folks poet" in the noblest sense, died in abject misery, occasioned by family persecutions and domestic trials. To record the annoyances suffered by men of letters at the hands of ignorant and suspicious Government officials, the number of times they were fined, imprisoned or banished, would necessitate the writing of a large volume.

Yet, with all these drawbacks, the literature of Russia has attained an importance which entitles it to the consideration of foreign nations. This is especially true of its poetic literature. The chief barrier to its study is the extreme difficulty of the language. Years of close application are necessary to give a foreigner that nice familiarity with its genius as well as its forms which is essential to the intelligent study of its literature. Few men, outside of German Universities, possess the time or the patience for labor so great where the reward is comparatively small. Among Englishmen Mr. W. R. S. RALSTON, of the British Museum, the author of an admirable translation of the fables of KRILOF, has given great attention to the language and literature of Russia; and our own BAYARD TAYLOR,—the only man who has ever translated Faust into English, and whose rare faculty for discerning the spirit of a foreign language, as well as his facility in mastering the details of its structure, place him in the very front rank of translators,—has, we understand, devoted much time (probably by way of recreation from his severe Goethean labors) to the same study. We trust to see, as the fruit of his researches, a volume which shall give Americans as true an insight into the intellectual life of Russia as his Faust has given into that of Germany.

This important service has been ably performed for German readers by FRIEDRICH BODENSTEDT, the translator of several Russian works. We have now before us two neat little volumes containing his translation of the poetical works of MICHAEL LERMONTOFF, whose tragic death, in the prime of his years, was mentioned near the beginning of this article. This gifted man has been called the "Byron" of Russia. The resemblance of the two poets is certainly striking. Each led a passionate and restless life; each was cursed with a misanthropic temperament, and was at constant war with his fellows; each loved liberty and hated oppression; and each was gifted with the fiery tone of poetry, which uttered glowing thoughts in words that burn. Both poets felt the same strong attraction to the East, and their finest poetry found its inspiration there. Both were also distinguished by their love of natural scenery, as well as by their wonderful power of poetic description, which enabled them to suggest a landscape with a single line and form a picture for the imagination with all the reality and vividness of a painting.

Like BYRON, LERMONTOFF was of noble family. At an early age he entered the army, but his temper unfitted him for a military career. Reckless by nature, and impatient of restraint, he was constantly in trouble and disgrace, and at length gave such offense to his superiors by an ode on the death of PUSCHKIN that he was banished to the Caucasus, where most of his poems were written, and where his life was sacrificed in a duel. The manner of his death was highly characteristic of the man. Dreading lest he might be crippled for life, he insisted upon taking his position on the very edge of a lofty precipice over which he would fall to certain death should he receive a severe wound. It is singular that he should have described just such a duel in a novel—for he was a master of prose as well as of poetic fiction.

Of his longer poems the one that has most forcibly excited our admiration, in BODENSTEDT's German version, is "The Circassian Boy." Fully aware of the impossibility of doing complete justice to a poet by translation, especially translation at second hand, we venture to give our readers an outline of the poetic narrative, with a few versified passages from the German version, which we have been assured by a thorough master of both languages presents a very accurate reflection of the original. It is proper to state that some of the following passages were printed several years ago, in a weekly paper of limited circulation, for which the writer of this article was then an occasional contributor. The recent revival of popular interest in everything connected with Russia and her people, will justify the resurrection of these passages from the obscurity to which they were then consigned.

The story is very simple. A Circassian lad, stolen by a Russian soldier from his parents, is adopted by monks and brought up in all the rigor of cloister life. At length they determine that he shall become a monk; but, smitten with inborn love of freedom, secretly nursed through all the years of his captivity, he escapes and attempts to make his way back to his native land. Ignorant of the way, he loses himself in the forest, and wanders back to the vicinity of the cloister, where he is discovered lying exhausted on the ground, and is brought back in a dying condition by the monks. Perceiving that he is about to die, the old gray-bearded Superior offers him the consolations of religion, when, roused to sudden strength, he tells the brotherhood the sad story of his wanderings. This done, he falls back and dies. Thus simple in its elements, the poem yet possesses a deep tragic interest. The young hero is nameless. He is simply a captive boy, in whose heart the sacred fire of freedom, love, and heroism, long smothered but never quenched, suddenly breaks out with fierce intensity, and consumes his life.

The poem opens with an allusion to a ruined cloister, presumably the very one in which the captive boy was immured:

"A cloister stood, not long ago,
Where Kura and Aragua flow
Together in their seaward race,
As sisters heart to heart embrace.
The wanderer, idly pausing there,
Still marks the ruins, strown and bare,—
The shattered columns of the door,
The arches rent, the crumbling towers.
But in yon chapel nevermore
Their fragrant cloud the censers pour,
Nor evermore, at lonely hours,
Are masses heard, or solemn chants.
One ghostly form the ruin haunts,
An old, dumb man, of feeble breath,
Forgotten both by men and death;
He clears the moss from graven stones,
That moulder over mouldering bones,
And tell of vanished power and fame,
And how a weary monarch came,
Forsaking courtly pomp and throne,
To dwell in Russia with his own."

The site of this cloister, at the conjunction of the rivers Kura and Aragua, was near the town of Tiflis, through whose streets—at some period of time left poetically indefinite—a soldier strode along, leading a captive boy, about five Summers old:

"A chieftain's child,
Like mountain spirit, shy and wild;
With all his father's heart and will,
When questioned, he was proudly still!
And offered food aside would wave,
And so drooped proudly toward the grave."

Finding his captive thus unmanageable, the soldier left him in the street to die—this is at least suggested by the context; but an old monk, taking compassion on the lad, gives him shelter in the cloister, and calls him back to life.

"But then
The sprightliness of youth had flown;
Thoughtful and silent he had grown;
He shunned the intercourse of men,
No'er smiled, and scarcely spoke again;
Would oft gaze eastward, with deep sighs;
Hot sorrows would o'erflow his eyes
When thoughts of home and kindred woke;
And though he grew more calm with time,
And learned to speak his captor's spoke,
He ne'er forgot his native clime."

Thus the years passed, until the monks, having baptized their young captive, though unable to convert him, attempted to force upon him cloister vows. Watching his opportunity, he fled, one tempestuous night, while the frightened brothers were stretched prone on the ground before the altar. For three days he was diligently sought, and at the close of the third day he was found and brought back to the cloister. Seeing that the hand of death was upon him, the Superior leaned over his bedside to whisper a last prayer for the departing soul; but with a sudden energy the captive raised himself from his pillow, and in impassioned strain, poured forth the long pent sorrows of his heart. After thanking the old man for his solicitude and care, he confessed that one passion only has filled his heart through all the years of his captivity—to be free and at home with his kindred:

"In dreams, in watches of the night
It urged me forth to noble fight,
To deserts, where the mountains wear
Wild cloud and mantling storm, and where
Men live as free as eagles fly!
* * * * * * *
Alas! that joy is past my power,
My dream, even as it came, has fled;
I languish toward an alien grave,
An orphan, stranger,—and a slave.

The grave I fear not; still and deep,
There fiery passion sinks to sleep,
I shrink, so young, to close my eyes.
In dreamless sleep on earth and skies,
So young, so young! Hast thou ne'er known
The joyous dreams of youth, O sage?
Hast not thy heart, ere withering age
Chilled all its fibres into stone,
Burned hot with love, beat wild with hate?
* * * * * * *
What though in weakness of old age,
With failing eyes, and whitened hair,
The world, grown hard for thee to bear,
Thou dost renounce with forced disdain?
Ah, Greybeard, thou hast had thy share,
Hast known what youthful years can give;
Disdaining and renouncing, yet
Thou still hast something to regret;—
Thou hast lived, would that I might live!

Then follows a vivid description of what he had seen during his brief enjoyment of liberty:

"And what I saw, in my short dream
Of freedom!—waving woods, and plains
Rich with the wealth of Summer rains;
Unfettered waterfall and stream;
Fair hills, with groves luxuriant plumed,
That shook and gleamed with every gust;
Grim rocks, that darkly heavenward loomed,
Uncheered with grass their rugged crust;
Between the chafing torrent foamed;
* * * * * * *
And mountains, altars of the world;
The mists about their summit curled,
Sun-kindled at the break of day;
And bands of clouds, like pilgrims gray,
Slow wandering toward the sacred East;
And distant, shimmering through the mist,
In his eternal robe of snow,
I saw the old Caucasus glow!
I knew not why my heart grew light;
I heard a voice of secret might
Say, "Once those regions were thy home!"
I sank, in glorious dreams to roam;
Visions of happier days of yore
Made my soul clearer than before.

My home flashed back upon my sight:—
The grim defile, where blackest night
At sunset reigns; the open ground
Studded with fields, and cottages
Under the shadow of great trees;
I heard the baying of the hound,
The bleat of flocks, on homeward way,
The herdsman's shout, the horse's neigh.
Old men, with faces scarred and browned,
Sat talking by our cottage door,
In the soft twilight; and the gleam
Of arms flashed sharply through my dream,
And there my father stood once more
With that grand look he always wore;—
In sheet of mail I saw him stand,
With shield on arm and sword in hand;
Still, still I see him, life-like clear,
The rattle of his mail I hear!
My sisters in my vision came,
Their eyes with tenderest love aflame;
I heard, but not with mortal ears,—
'Twas echoes out of far-off years,—
Their low songs round my cradle sung.
And, chattering through the deep defile,
The shallow river raced and sprang,
Upon whose banks I used to while
Whole hours and Summer days away,
And watch the swallows at their play
Low skimming, ere the fall of rain,
Dip their light wings and soar again."

The dying boy then relates the circumstances of his flight from the cloister, and exults in the memory of his riotous fellowship with the storm that abetted his escape. He knew not whither he was flying. He cared to know only that he was free. Wearied at length, he lay down upon a mossy bank on the edge of a deep ravine, of which the breaking day had given him timely warning. He listened, but heard no sound of pursuing footsteps. Now and then the cry of a wild beast broke upon the silence of the night, and presently

"I heard the warble, as I lay,
Of birds that felt the break of day.—
Morn flames, the cloud no longer grieves,
Low sighs the wind through pattering leaves;
The flowers, fresh-breathing, wake again,
And I, in spite of weary pain,
Uplift my eyes against the light.—
Below me, like a nether sky,
Yawns a black gulf,—the plunging stream,
Far under, shoots a ghastly gleam.
God's living garden, far and wide,
Bloomed, in primeval wealth and pride;
The blossoms on their foreheads kept
The sparkling tears the morn had wept;
O'er many a tree, with fingers fine,
Clambered and clung the wandering vine.
* * * * * * *
I sank upon the grass again,
And listened to the varying strain
That seemed to flow from everywhere.
Mysterious murmurs filled the air,
As if the cloudsiwere whispering low
What only the listening earth should know;
And answers rose from field and wood,
Which the clouds only understood.
* * * * * * *
Ah, heaven that morning was so near,
And all the air so pure and clear,
One might have seen an angel's flight
Through its blue vault of burning light.
Heart, eye absorbed in that fair sight,
Fiery, in thoughtful dreams immersed,
Till roused by noonday heat and thirst.
Then, downward toward the torrent's side,
I clomb the dangerous precipice
Scant shrub and yielding rock supplied
A foothold it were death to miss;
And often, underneath my foot,
Sudden the treacherous stone would shoot,
Swift downward to the water crash,
And leave me hung o'er the abyss;
But youth is ever bold and rash,
And I was not afraid of death;
And when, at last, with failing breath,
I reached the end of that steep way,
Sweet was the freshness of the spray
That dew-like filled the air unseen.
I kneeled upon the border green
To drink,—when, hush! a voice, not far,
And footsteps echoing through the wood!
Oh, what a start and blinding jar
That sound sent through my languid blood!
I started up, all eye and ear,
And still the song and step drew near;
So sweet, so full of life that song,
So artless, freely sung along,
As if she only hummed the names
Of those who shared her rustic games.
It was a short and simple lay;
But deep into my heart it pressed,
And spirits, after weary day,
Still sing me with it into rest."

Worn out by his long and weary flight through the forest, the poor fugitive lay as in a dream on the bank of the torrent, saw the maiden fill her pitcher and depart by the way she came, until she disappeared from his sight in a little cottage that looked as if it was growing out of the rock on which it stood. The door closed upon her, and he was again alone in the world. Then, says the poem:

"Wearied with all that fevered stress
Of soul, I stretched me in the shade,
And sleep, with pitying tenderness,
Her hand upon my eyelids laid.
In the sweet trouble of a dream
I saw the Georgian maid again,
But woke at last to life and pain.
The chilly moon's pernicious beam
Smote on my face, and, crystalline,
The stars shot down their sparkries fine.
And now and then a dragon cloud
Made at the moon, with gaping jaws;
She held her way, serene and proud.
There was deep silence through the night,
As though life made a death-like pause;
Seemed even the roaring of the stream
The unreal murmur heard in dream.
A faintly glimmering taper light
Was flickering in the lonely hut,
And flickering died away too soon,
Leaving a darkness, as when shut
Heaven's cloudy doors on star and moon."

His first impulse was to seek the Georgian maiden; but the suddenly awakened thought of his native land overmastered every other feeling, and once more, weary and faint with hunger, he set forth upon his journey. The forest grew thicker and darker, as he advanced; and when he climbed a tall tree, to obtain a sight of the surrounding country and if possible discover some landmark by which he could direct his steps, the sight of an apparently limitless forest took all courage from his heart:

"Despairing, desperate, down the tree
I slid; my limbs were wet and cold;
I flung me on the forest mold
And beat the blank air in my rage,
Like some wild creature in a cage;
Wept bitter tears;—but even then,
In frenzy, anguish, and despair,
I wanted not the help of men:
That sooner would the tiger share!"

While still lying on the ground, he was startled by the shadow of a panther on the grass, as the magnificent creature bounded between him and the moon. Springing to his feet, with the instinct of his race he tore a sapling up by the roots and awaited the attack. As the hot blood shot through his veins, and his strength suddenly returned, he rejoiced, even in that moment of danger, in the thought that had he been free he would not have held an inferior place among the warriors of his native land. The panther crept cautiously toward him, and the fiery eye-balls of his savage adversary so kindled his own courage, that he sprang forward to meet him half-way, and felled him with a blow from his club. The next instant the fight was renewed, with such frenzy that it would have been difficult to tell which was beast and which was man. A lucky thrust of the club between the panther's jaws decided the contest against the brute:

"And falling hard and heavily,
With a hoarse growl, he left me free.
But yet once more, before he died,
A maddened look of rage he cast,
And face to face, with warrior pride,
With his proud foe, he breathed his last."

After a short space of rest, he once more endeavored to work his way through the forest. But now an oppressive foreboding filled his heart. Something told him that he should never reach his native land. Still he pressed onward. The dawning day was visible through the branches over head; the forest became less dense. Suddenly emerging from its cover he

"Saw the valley mists uplift,
In shadowy fold and melting drift,
And on the winds that cleared the morn
Faint sounds from distant fields were borne."

Everything wore an all too-familiar look. Alas, there was the cloister from which he had fled! Its white wall, gleaming in the sun, looked to him like the tombstone of his buried hopes. Without strength or heart to fly, he flung himself down upon the grass, and there, "with sorrow over full," he lay

"Slow dying, like some prison-plant,
In a damp cell, where light is scant;
Its leaves it cannot well unfold;
In musty air and cankering mold;
It longs and languishes for light
Till one, of heart compassionate,
Pitying its cold and dreary fate,
Removes it from the dungeon night,
Into the garden air and sun;
Life brightens for the little one.
But soon, beneath his burning eyes,
Beside the rose it droops and dies.
* * * * * * *
In the tall grass I laid my head,
But all was shadeless, stark and dead;
From out the rock's deep, barren rift
I watched the vapors upward drift,
The world lay silent, as if dreaming;
I listened for the wild bird's screaming,
The grasshopper's shrill, cheery tone,
Or rills clear dash o'er rock and stone,
To make the silence less drear and lone."

While lying there, in a half stupor, he had a strange dream. He seemed to be lying in the bed of a torrent, feeling no motion, but conscious of the wild rush of water above him. All about him, in the crystal element, sported gay-colored fishes; and one of them, circling nearer and nearer, and growing more bold and familiar, swam at length close to his head, and in a tiny, silvery voice, sang a delicate ballad in his ear—a mermaiden's invitation to live forever in thatco ol and lovely world:

"I listened hushed, I listened long;
And with the fishes' silvery song
Mingled the ripple and the splash,
The hollow roar, the crystal dash,
All sounds in which the torrent spoke;
When suddenly the vision broke,
Dark grew the world, and swam my head;
Upon the grass I lay, as dead."

There is little more to tell. There the monks found him, as already narrated, and bore him back to the cloister, where he died. The poem closes with a beautiful touch of tender feeling, some faint trace of which, the writer trusts, may be perceptible in the translation:

"And when my heart no longer heaves,—
I think you have not long to wait,—
Carry me past the garden gate
To where two cassias shake their leaves,
In Summer, o'er the waving grass;
Where the sweet breezes gently pass,
Stealing the balmy breath of flowers,
And fluttering leaves flash sparkling green,
In sunlight after Summer showers;
There, Greybeard, let my body rest!
There, 'neath the blue of heaven serene,
Sweet sleep shall calm my weary breast;
There, old Caucasus looms in sight!
Perchance, from his far-gleaming height,
In the loud tempest he may send
A greeting to his orphaned friend;
And I may see a brother bend
Above me, and his hand extend
To soothe away the burning pain,
To wipe the cold sweat from my brow,
That gathers thick and clammy now.
And whisper thoughts of home again.
Refreshed, my worn-out flesh shall leap
In gladness of the earlier day;—
With this sweet thought I sank away,
And, cursing no one, fell asleep."

So ends this beautiful poem. It is full of imagination and pathos. The writer is fully aware of the imperfections of his translation, and gives it to the public more in the hope of inducing some one familiar with the Russian to attempt a direct version, than as an adequate representation of the power and beauty of the original.

The Louvre Auctions.

M. ESCRIBE, the auctioneer, still continues his labors at the Louvre, going regularly through the vast quantity of property left behind by the Emperor. Down to the 31st of December, the articles disposed of brought the following sums: Plate, 83,382 francs; linen, 190,225 francs; carriages, 264,954 francs; arms, 15,501 francs; wine, 326,964 francs; furs, 21,189 francs; porcelains, 193,719 francs; kitchen utensils, 36,438 francs; furniture, conti, 20,575 francs, making a total of 1,152,845 francs. The early part of the latest week was devoted to plated articles, while Jan. 13 was appropriated to Sèvres china and glass, all bringing high prices.

OUR SAVING BANKS.

Annual Exhibits for 1871—How the Funds are Invested—The German Up-Town, the Citizens, the Union Dime, the New-York, and Equitable Savings Banks.

The financial statements of our City savings banks are continued this morning. As already stated, the publication of these reports has met with very general satisfaction, and some of the most reliable savings banks of the City have voluntarily sent their statements to the TIMES. While the excitement about the recent failures of savings institutions still continues, which failures are attributable either to reckless speculation, or to flagrant dishonesty, the publication of these financial statements may in some measure serve to retain public confidence where it is deserved, by showing depositors the manner in which their funds have been invested by those to whom they are intrusted. In several of these statements it will be observed that the furniture, fixtures and safes, and in one even the postage and revenue stamps are included among the resources of the banks. These items are only to be found in the statements of the smaller banks, and whether they can be called legitimate resources or not is left to the public to judge.

THE GERMAN UP-TOWN SAVINGS BANK.

This bank is not, as is sometimes supposed, a branch of the savings bank above referred to. Its officers are Mr. CHRISTIAN SCHWARTZ, President, and Mr. CHARLES SCHAFFNER, Secretary. The surplus in the subjoined statement shows an increase of $7,028 36 over that of last year.

EQUITABLE SAVINGS INSTITUTION.

This is one of the youngest savings institutions in the City, having been established only twenty months. It is situated on Sixth-avenue and Twelfth-street, and its principal officers Mr JOHN P. WHITE, President, Messrs. G. T. JACKSON and RICHARD AMERMAN Vice-Presidents, and Mr. FLOYD CLARKSON Secretary. The charter granted to this bank is very narrow in the range it gives for investments, or as collaterals for loans. The President states that the business of the bank is conducted on the safest and most conservative principles, taking no checks, opening no accounts to be drawn against by check, and loaning money only on United States stock. The assets of the bank amount this year to $26,417 41, and the surplus to $10 17.

THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

How the Work is Done—What is to Be Done and When it Will be Finished.

Of the fifty thousand business men who every day cross the river at Fulton Ferry, at least forty thousand take note of the progress of the enormous stone tower on the Brooklyn shore, to which will be anchored the Long Island ends of the huge wire cables for the East River Bridge. It is amusing to listen to the various and varying comments made by passengers. The skeptics who believe, or say they do, that the bridge will never be successfully built, but must, of necessity, fall of its own weight before the span is completed, are by no means few. Others there are who, with a wise shrug of the shoulders, will admit that "the bridge may be finished, but not in your day nor mine, old boy." Then there are others, men of the present day, who, bearing in mind the other miracles of modern engineering—the Menai Bridge, the Mont Cenis Tunnel, and a score of other mighty works—believe that the bridge will be finished, and that any man who is not enterprising enough to die within the next five years, will see it used as commonly as are now the ferry-boats. It is to show the soundness of the convictions of this last-mentioned class, and to assure the public that within the next four years, should no untoward accident intervene, the breadth of water between the sister Cities of New-York and Brooklyn will be crossed by a solid bridge, that the present article is written.

A slight sketch, giving our readers an idea of the general plan of the work, its progress and present condition, will be interesting to very many, (though at the cost of some repetition.)

It was necessary that the bridge should be so high as to enable the tallest masts of the largest vessels to go under it, and should have no supporting piers in mid-stream to impede the most perfect use of the entire breadth of the river. These conditions could only be met by a "suspension bridge," which necessitated the erection of two enormously high and strong towers to support the cables which are to sustain the roadway. It is to the building of these structures that the Company are now bending all their energies. Solid bottom far below the river bed had to be found on which to base the huge pile of masonry, for this must rest on a substratum as firm as the rocky ribs of either island. The preliminary borings, drillings, diggings and other explorations took several months of exceedingly hard work, and the time during which this was being carried on was one of the utmost anxiety and care to the engineer, Mr. ROEBLING, senior, who had the matter in charge. After much examination the tower points were settled on both the Long Island and the Manhattan shores, and the work was fairly begun. On the Brooklyn side it was necessary to go to the depth of 44½ feet to secure a solid foundation. It was not solid rock, but large bowlders laid close together, and gravel and sand so crowded into the interstices as to make the stratum nearly as substantial as rock itself.

On the New-York side the task was much more difficult. For many feet the bottom of the river is made of trash of all sorts—old sunken docks, half-rotted piles, wrecked vessels, old chains, anchors, &c. At last, at a depth of 80½ feet, the firm "bed-rock" was reached, that submarine spur of the Catskill Mountains upon which the Island of Manhattan is seated. And at this depth will eventually rest the New-York tower.

At present the work on the Brooklyn tower consists simply of laying stone, and there are employed from thirty to forty men, all stonemasons and their helpers. The progress of each day's work is plainly visible to every passenger on the boats of the Fulton Ferry. At the New-York terminus the work is being prosecuted with all the force that 300 men and twenty steam-engines can bring into action, and one noticeable fact is, that all the labor is done by "day's work," there being no "contract work" whatever.

Entering the work-yard of the Bridge Company on the New-York side, on South-street, two or three blocks above Peck-slip, the visitor is admitted to a huge inclosure. Huge timbers, beams and braces are piled up in great heaps, and these are handled, not by main strength and brute force, but by a system of little portable train-ways, which are nearly as manageable as a flexible gas-pipe; a heavypiece of timber, which the unassisted strength of forty men would not avail to move, is, by not more than three laborers, taken upon a little truck, and in three minutes is deposited in the desired place.

The work is progressing much faster on the second, or New-York tower; than it did on the first, or Brooklyn one. Of course increased facility of doing work came, by practice, to all who were employed, from the Chief Engineer down to the common laborer.

On the New-York tower there are now employed about 250 men, of whom 200 are laborers. These are divided into gangs of 100 each. A gang goes down into the air-chamber and works four hours; then they have four hours' rest; then four hours' work again, and the day's work is finished, eight hours being the limit. The men have the assistance of twelve steam-engines, known as "compressors," to supply them with air; there are two engines for hoisting stone, two for hoisting mud and other débris, and two for sending down tools, materials, and for general use. As many men are employed as can be advantageously managed, and the work is pushed on as fast as possible.

The two great towers which are to sustain the main cables are to be each 268 feet in height. This elevation is necessary, as the bridge at the lowest point of its roadway must be 118 feet above high water, in order to offer no obstruction to even the larg

The Committee of Seventy's Charter Favorably Reported.

Attitude of the Different Parties on the Subject.

More New Charters in Course of Preparation.

Barnard and Cardozo Arraigned by the Bar Association.

Tom Fields Begs for a Few Days' Delay.

A Measure to Reform the Harbor Abuses in New-York.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Friday, Feb. 2, 1872.

The Assembly Committee on Cities held a meeting this morning and took up the charter of the Committee of Seventy. After some discussion it was agreed to report the charter favorably today, which was accordingly done, and the leading measure of reform for the City of New-York is now before the House for discussion. A few immaterial amendments were made to the charter in the Committee, but the only alteration of importance is a change in the time for holding the first election under it, from the second Tuesday in April next to the third Tuesday in March. After this year the elections under the charter are to be held annually on the second Tuesday in April. It will thus be seen that, in case the charter is adopted, the people of NewYork will have an opportunity in six weeks from Tuesday next to make a clean sweep of their present Ring rulers and turn over a new leaf in municipal affairs. A strong pressure will be brought to bear from different, and even from antagonistic, sources in New-York, to prevent the passage of the charter. The Tammany Republicans, who now hold office by favor of their Ring masters, will of course oppose it to a man, and it appears to be equally unacceptable to a large portion of the regular Republicans of the City, if those now representing them here correctly express their views. It is understood that both branches of the party are preparing a charter, to be submitted next week and placed in competition with the work of the Committee of Seventy. The "Citizens' Association" is also in the field with a charter which was introduced in the Senate this morning. It looks now as if charters were to be as plenty here as underground railroad schemes, but I am inclined to think the rule of "first come, first served" will prevail, and the Committee of Seventy will bear off the prize. It is certain that the line of division as between Fenton and Anti-Fenton, Administration and Anti-Administration, Republicans in the Legislature will not be drawn in reference to the Seventy's charter. ALVORD, HUSTED, MACKEY and others who have hitherto been arrayed on the Tammany-Republican side of the House, are understood to be in favor of the charter as a whole. The Democrats, as a general thing, pretend to be indifferent as to what kind of a charter is adopted; but they would readily join their forces with either branch of the Republicans that would patch up the present charter so as to retain in power their own partisans. There are some Republicans who favor the passage of a charter that shall be out-and-out partisan in its character, and openly framed in the interest of their party. They say that the Democracy has never made any bones about legislating for the benefit of their party when they had the power, and that the Republicans ought to protect themselves in the same way; that the people at the last election decided in their favor as between the two parties, one or the other of which must naturally rule the City, and that since they have got to take the responsibility of legislation this Winter, they ought to take the power with it. The prevailing sentiment, however, at the present time, is against partizan legislation for New-York, and as the Seventy's charter is non-partizan, and the first in the field, and as all are anxious to be rid of the subject its chances of success may be set down as good.

MEMORIAL FROM THE BAR ASSOCIATION.

Mr. ALVORD today presented the anxiously-looked for memorial of the Bar Association of New-York, containing charges against a portion of the Judiciary of that City—especially Judges BARNARD and CARDOZO—and asking for an investigation. Mr. ALVORD moved that the memorial be referred to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to make the investigation asked for forthwith. Mr. FIELDS moved as an amendment that it be printed and placed on the tables of members for their examination, to be taken up on Monday evening next. He said the air was full of rumors and charges against officials of all grades, both City, State and Federal, and, while he had no desire to shield any one who was guilty, he thought that every man, and particularly Judges of the high Courts of the State, was entitled to have the charges against him made specific before being called on to defend himself. He closed by appealing to the gray hairs of Mr. ALVORD to extend the same justice to the parties implicated in this memorial that he would demand for himself under like circumstances. Mr. ALVORD replied that the charges were not new to the parties interested; that they had been made and repeated for years in the public prints, and had, doubtless, been read and thoroughly understood by the Judges implicated in them. There was no surprise on their part, they had permitted these charges to be iterated and reiterated without demanding, as they should have done, if innocent, an investigation into their truth. They had now been formally prosecuted to the Legislature by a large and influential association of members of the Bar, and it was due to the public that an investigation should be had without unnecessary delay. Mr. JACOBS moved as an amendment that the investigation be extended to the County Judge of Chenango County, against whom charges had been made by the Supervisors of that county. Mr. ALVORD objected, as no memorial had been presented to the Legislature with reference to that official. The original motion of Mr. ALVORD was then adopted, and the memorial was referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to make the investigation.

A REFORM QUARANTINE BILL.

Col. HAWKINS introduced a bill to establish a Quarantine for the Harbor of New-York, and to regulate the powers and duties of the Health Officer. The bill has been prepared under the supervision of the representative mercantile bodies of the City, such as the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, &c., and is intended to protect the merchants from the abuses and extortions that have so long prevailed in the Quarantine Department, and which have inflicted so much injury upon the commerce of the port. It is to be followed by a bill reorganizing the system of Harbor-Masters and Port Wardens in New-York, which, as now managed, is scarcely less injurious to commerce than the Quarantine establishment.

THE WOOD INVESTIGATION.

The Senate today, on the request of Mr. AMES, authorized the Special Committee, of which he is Chairman, having charge of the investigation in the case of Senator JAMES WOOD, to sit in the City of New-York.

THE ADJOURNMENT OF THE ASSEMBLY.

A strong effort was made to adjourn the Assembly over to Monday night, but it failed, and a motion to have a session this evening was carried. The Senate, however, after the usual amount of coquetting with the question carried the motion to adjourn over by a vote of 16 to 10. It may be said in justice to the Senate that the vote of General Orders was gone through with and every bill ready for action was duly considered before the adjournment.

THE CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION.

The proposed new Charter of which the Citizens' Association is the sponsor, was introduced today by Senator TIEMANN, and took the usual reference. A good deal of curiosity exists hereabouts to know who now constitute this once famous Association. It was supposed that on the downfall of that illustrious pillar of reform, the patriarchial SANDS, the Association would become defunct, but is still continues to manifest some signs of life, though in a spasmodic way. Who attends its meetings? Where are they held? Who is the successor of the great SANDS? "Light is wanted on all these points."

NEW-YORK GRAND JURIES.

The bill to authorize two Grand Juries to sit simultaneously in the City of New-York passed the Senate to-day.

HARBOR-MASTERS AND HEALTH OFFICE.

Mr. MURPHY introduced a bill in the Senate today relative to Harbor-Masters, vesting the appointment of those officials and the Captain of the Port in the Governor alone. He is to have the power to remove any of them at any time. It is not likely to pass while HOFFMAN is Governor.

Mr. MURPHY also introduced a bill clothing the Governor with the same powers in the case of the Health Officer.

THE SEVENTH REGIMENT.

Mr. WEISMANN'S bill relative to the Seventh Regiment gives the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund power to set apart a portion of Reservoir-square, 200 feet in width, running from Sixth-avenue to the reservoir, for the erection of an armory for the regiment.

A NEW ARMORY FOR THE SEVENTH.

Senator WIESMAN introduced a bill providing that the Committee of the Sinking Fund of the City of New-York are hereby required to lease to the field officers, for the time being, of the Seventh Regiment of the National Guard, all that portion of the Reservoir-square, in the City of New-York, which lies north of a line commencing at a point on Sixth-avenue, 127 feet 6 inches northerly from the corner of Fortieth-street and Sixth-avenue, thence easterly and parallel with Fortieth-street to the reservoir, and south of a line commencing on Sixth-avenue, 127 feet 6 inches from corner of Forty-second-street and to the reservoir, said square being 200 feet in width. The field officers of said regiment are hereby authorized to accept such land, so leased, and to erect thereon a suitable building for an armory and drill-room, to be used by said regiment. Such lease shall be made upon the same terms as to rent and duration as are accorded to religious and charitable societies. S.

The Terwilliger Investigation—Evening Session of the Assembly.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 2.—The Committee on TERWILLIGER'S case met again this evening. The witness GRACIE was again examined, and pointed out in the books of WEED, PARSONS & Co., which were produced, the entries covering the transactions he had previously testified to. Some of the bills which were said to have been increased in amount by Mr. TERWILLIGER were produced, and the witness failed completely to prove that TERWILLIGER had any knowledge of or connection with the transaction. Mr. TREMAIN, counsel for TERWILLIGER, proposed to show why the bill was altered, but owing to illness of Senator HARDENBERGH, an adjournment was had until Tuesday next.

At the evening session of the Assembly it was evident at first that no quorum was present, and Mr. ALVORD moved a call of the roll. Members enough dropped in during the call to make a quorum. A great number of excuses were asked for on behalf of absent members, mostly for frivolous or absurd causes, but they were generally voted down with much merriment, and after the introduction of a number of bills, the Assembly took up general orders. S.

RULES.

The Committee on Joint Rules submitted a report, which was agreed to. The House took up the report of the Committee on the Rules of the House as a special order, and after amendment and considerable discussion it was adopted.

CORRUPTION ON THE BENCH.

Mr. ALVORD presented a memorial of the Bar Association of New-York in reference to charges against certain Judges of New-York City. In doing so he paid a warm tribute to the usefulness of that Association, who have thus placed themselves at the front in making grave charges against high Judicial officers of New-York City. He hoped the Legislature would give the subject that attention which it deserves, and which is invited by the high character of the memorialists and the gravity of the charges made by them. The supplemental memorial reads as follows:

To the Honorables the Legislature of the State of New-York:

The undersigned, members of the Judiciary Committee of the Bar Association of the City of New-York, respectfully represent that the evidence given before the said Committee, upon which their report to the said Association, which accompanies the memorial of that body, is based, so far as the same affects the Judges of the Supreme Court of this State, relates to the official conduct of Judges GEORGE G. BARNARD and ALBERT CARDOZO, of the City of New-York. And the undersigned, uniting in presenting this supplemental memorial in their own behalf, and believing that it is due, not only to all persons interested in the administration of justice, but to the Judges above named that the investigation prayed for by the Bar Association should be promptly made, respectfully pray that such investigation be ordered in such form as your honorable body shall deem most meet and proper.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 26, 1872.

Signed by

Wheeler H. Peckham,	Francis G. Barlow,
Noah Davis,	Joshua M. Van Cott,
John Slosser,	James C. Carter,
G. M. Spier,	Wm. M. Pritchard.

In connection with the memorial, Mr. ALVORD offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the memorial be now presented to the standing Committee on the Judiciary, and that Committee take inquiry and investigation concerning the matters therein alleged as to abuse in the administration of justice in the City and County of New-York, and such Committee is authorized and directed to conduct such inquiry and investigation, and take testimony touching the City of New-York, and report by bill or otherwise, as it shall think proper, and at any time.

Mr. FIELDS said, as this was a very important matter, he trusted the mover would let the documents lie on the table, be printed and made a special order for an early day. Mr. ALVORD said that under ordinary circumstances he would consent, but the very air was tainted with charges of corruption, and the sooner the matter was taken in hand the better. Mr. FIELDS said the very reason stated by the gentleman was an argument in favor of no hasty action. Serious charges are made against two of our Supreme Court Judges. He knew the air was tainted with these charges, but he knew that they were not confined to the City of New-York. These charges spread over the States, and he stood there as one of the representatives of the people to demand that there shall be a thorough investigation of all these charges, wherever they rest. He did not think it was our duty to precipitate action in this matter. He appealed to the solemn judgment of the House to proceed cautiously. He appealed for a careful and candid consideration of the case of these Judges. All these charges may be true. They may be sustained by evidence, and they may not. These Judges may have something to say, and he had, therefore, simply asked for a short delay. Mr. ALVORD said these gentlemen had had time enough to take notice of the matter. Mr. JACOBS moved that the committee also investigate the charges against the County Judge of Chenango County. He was informed that the Supervisors of that County had made serious charges against that Judge, and he asked the member from Chenango County if he were correct? The SPEAKER said the motion was not in order as the question to which the member appealed to was not present. Mr. JACOBS then withdrew his motion, to be renewed at the proper time. Mr. ALVORD'S resolution was then adopted.

OPPOSITION TO STREET OPENINGS.

Among the remonstrances presented was one signed by CHARLES O'CONOR, and other leading citizens of New-York, against opening and extending One Hundred and Twenty-seventh, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth and One Hundred and Twenty-ninth streets, between St. Nicholas and New-York avenues, New-York City.

REPORTS.

Among the bills reported were the new Charter prepared by the Committee of Seventy, for New-York City; a bill repealing the clause in the act of 1871, giving the City printing to the Transcript Association; a bill amending the act fixing the fees of Sheriffs, excepting in New-York and Kings County.

TAX MAP OF STATEN ISLAND.

Mr. JUDD introduced a bill to appoint Commissioners to make up a tax map of Staten Island. It appropriates not more than $15,000, and names the following Commissioners: James W. Simonton, Major Jas. Guion, Alvin Bradley, David Gardiner, and B. Kreischer. Mr. JUDD, in introducing the bill, said he did so without approving or indorsing its provisions. The House took a recess till 7½ P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

A number of bills were introduced, among them one defining the crime of murder in the first and second degrees.

CANAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Canal Appropriation bill was introduced:

Making appropriations to provide for a deficiency in the appropriation for repairs and maintenance of the canals during the fiscal year, commencing Oct. 1, 1872. This bill appropriates $770,000.

Making a reappropriation of moneys for the construction of new work upon and extraordinary repairs of the canals of the State, and for the payment of awards made by canal appraisers, $2,180,646, being the unexpended balance of the amount appropriated by the Mill Tax bill of 1870.

Making appropriations for the payment of the principal and interest on the canal debt, commencing Oct. 1, 1872, and to provide for the payment of the debt contracted under section 12, article 7 of the Constitution. This bill appropriates out of the revenues of the canal, $4,105,000, and out of the proceeds of any tax to be levied and collected, under the act of 1859, to pay the interest and reimburse the principal of the loan, $2,500,000.

PRIMARY ELECTIONS.

A bill was introduced to improve the navigation of the Hudson River; also to legalize primary elections in all the cities of the State. It requires inspectors of elections to organize by swearing each other into office; keep the polls open at least three hours; allow none but legal voters to vote; provide ballot-boxes; keep a poll list; count all the votes and publicly announce the result immediately; canvass the votes in public manner; if the votes exceed the list the excess shall be drawn by them, and duplicate certificates signed and forwarded, one to the Clerk of the Common Council, and the other to some newspaper published in the city in whose interest the election was held; the persons named in the returns shall be considered elected; only legal voters shall vote, and in the ward and district where they are entitled to vote; voters shall not vote at two primary elections; causes for challenge similar to those in the Election law are provided; false swearing is made perjury, punishable by three years' imprisonment; voting improperly is made a misdemeanor, punishable by imprisonment for four months; the bill makes it a misdemeanor for inspectors to allow any one to fraudulently vote, punishable by a fine of $500 or $1,000, or imprisonment for six months. Inspectors and Police are to maintain order, and it is made a misdemeanor for inspectors to wilfully violate the provisions of this bill, punishable by imprisonment of six months or fine of $250 or $1,000.

COLUMBIA COLLEGE.

The bill authorizing Columbia College to change its site was ordered to a third reading.

THE INSURANCE INVESTIGATION.

On motion of Mr. TOBEY the Insurance Committee was authorized to send a subcommittee to New-York to continue the investigation concerning the Insurance Department, with power to send for persons and papers.

MEXICO.

Bombardment of Camargo—Cortina Preparing to Retreat.

MATAMORAS, Feb. 2.—Gen. QUIROGA cannonaded Camargo last night, rendering the place untenable. CORTINA telegraphed this afternoon that he would fall back upon Reynosa. The National Guard has been called out here, and will be armed tomorrow. Gen. PALACIO is using every means to strengthen the fortifications, and put this city in a state of defense. There is, however, no enthusiasm among the people indicating a disposition to volunteer and assist the regular troops.

NEW-ORLEANS.

Progress of the Congressional Investigation.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 2.—The Congressional Investigating Committee was in session six hours today. Several witnesses were examined whose evidence was very strong against the Governor and members of the Legislature, showing bribery, violence, &c. Mr. CARR, one of the Warmoth leaders in the House, testified that the schism in the Republican Party originated between the Governor and Lieut.-Gov. DUNN; that the Federal officers afterward sided with DUNN. CARR had not remained in De Soto Parish, which he represented, over three months, all told, and had not been there since elected in 1870. During the investigation it has been shown there are many members in the Legislature who have never resided in the parishes they pretend to represent.

MISSOURI LEGISLATURE.

Caucuses on the Governor's Greenback Veto.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Feb. 2.—Special dispatches from Jefferson City state that the Democratic caucus, last night, took no definite action in regard to what course should be pursued in the House respecting the Governor's veto. The Liberal Republicans of the House also held a caucus, and by a vote of 15 to 3 decided to sustain the Governor's veto, and also agreed to a postponement of action on the veto in the House until the 15th inst., to give the Committee of Ways and Means time to perfect a plan for funding the State indebtedness.

The Steam-Boat Law—Important Action of Western Steam-Boat Men.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Feb. 2.—A meeting of the Philadelphia Association of Owners and Managers of Steam Vessels was held today, at which it was stated that owing to the persistent attacks upon the proposed new Steam-boat law by one or two members of the House Committee on Commerce, that the owners of Western river and lake steamers had telegraphed last night from Washington to their agents to refuse to carry passengers under existing laws, which action will tend very much to embarrass the passenger trade, but under the circumstances the owners have no option in the matter. Measures are proposed which, it is said, will in a few days go to show that patent-right men have bought up certain parties, who are opposing the proposed change in the law and using their influence to coerce members of Congress.

A Mutiny on the High Seas.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Feb. 2.—The bark Stampede, Capt. HATFIELD, which sailed yesterday for Cardenas, returned to-day. When off the Island, a dispute arose between the Captain and a negro seaman named FRANCIS. The latter was shot in the head by the mate. The crew were insubordinate, and the officers thought it better to return.

Hackmen's Extortions—Still Crying for More—The New Hack-Rates.

A TIMES reporter conversed, yesterday, with some of the leading stablemen and hackmen, in order to ascertain their views about the new hack ordinance proposed by Alderman VAN SCHAICK. Mr. J. M. BRIGGS, who has a large livery-stable, thought $1 50 an hour was not enough, except when the parties go shopping or calling, and when there are many stoppages. But when it came to delivering wedding-cards, or to take other "jobs" requiring incessant driving, $1 50 was far too little. If the hackmen had confined themselves to the lawful rates they would, he said, have had to sell their stock long ago. Mr. BRIGGS said: "You can't buy a nice carriage for less than $1,200. After it has been on the stand six months it has to go into the shop to be varnished, and this won't cost you less than $100. Every time it has to go to the shop the expense increases. As for the districts, I think it's wrong to ask a hackman to drive a party from the foot of Houston-street at the East River, to Twenty-third-street Ferry at the North River for $1, because it is all in one district. I could not do that job for $5. As for extortionate charges, I don't think any one gets swindled, anyhow. If people want to ride, let them look first at the rates. Another objection I see to this ordinance is that it favors the one-horse cabs. For a drive in the Park $2 per hour is not enough. I would charge $5 for the drive to and round the Park, and give them two hours to do it in."

The Hackmen's Association held a meeting last night in reference to the newly-proposed rates. They are well enough satisfied, they say, but they think it ridiculous to ask them to charge by the hour when they drive a party to King's Bridge or Harlem. They could drive the distance in two hours, and therefore could earn no more than $3, while they ought to have $5 for two-horse and $2 for one-horse vehicles.

WASHINGTON

The Secretaries of State and Treasury on the Washington Treaty.

Dilemma of the Democratic Free Traders—The Cunard Line and the Ocean Mails—Painful Features of the Pension Embezzlement.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2.—The House Committee on Foreign Affairs today heard the statements of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the fishery clauses of the Treaty of Washington bills, for the enforcement of which are now before that Committee. The Secretary of State is reported as having given at some length the reasons why the legislation required should be promptly enacted. One argument is that it is required as a measure of good faith, and that a failure to carry out these provisions would naturally be regarded by Great Britain as an unfriendly act. The Secretary of the Treasury gave his views with reference to what is necessary to be done for the relief of the merchant marine generally, as well as to protect the fishing interests of the country against the effect of free trade in fish. The Committee resolved to authorize their Chairman, Gen. BANKS, to report. The bill carrying these provisions into effect is known as the State Department bill, because prepared there, but it is understood that none of the members of the Committee are positively committed to its support, and are free to oppose or amend the bill, as they see fit. The Democrats on the Committee, Messrs. WOOD, MORGAN and ROBINSON, have opposed the bill thus far, but their party in the House, owing to its dishonest and partisan course on these measures, is now in a queer fix. If it will damage the Administration to defeat these provisions of the treaty, they want to vote that way. But to do so they must stultify themselves completely in regard to their principle of free trade, because the essence of it is involved in the free importation of Canadian fish, which is permitted by the treaty. The matter of indemnity to our fishing interests occupies a very peculiar position. Many Eastern members will vote for the bill to carry out the provisions of the treaty, if a measure of indemnity to the fishermen can accompany it, but against the latter will be most of the Democrats and many Western Republicans. A very warm and interesting debate will take place when the report of the Committee is made.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. MEDILL and Miss MEDILL, wife and daughter of Mayor MEDILL, of Chicago, and co-proprietor of the Chicago Tribune, are the guests of the President and Mrs. GRANT at the Executive Mansion.

THE OCEAN MAIL CONTRACT.

The Committees on Post-offices and Post Roads and those on Commerce in both Houses held a joint meeting today to consider the proposition of the Cunard line and of the Williams & Guion line to carry the Wednesday mails from New-York to Queenstown. The last proposition from the Cunard line, made after the decision against them last week, was to carry the mails for nothing. After further consideration of the subject they unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee, having fully considered the subject at a former meeting, see no reason to change its views and previous decision, and still advise the Postmaster-General to let the contract to the Williams & Guion line.

The Postmaster-General has accordingly signed the contract with the above line for two years from Jan. 1, 1872, at a compensation of six cents per ounce for letters and six cents per pound for newspapers. This ends a spirited contest, which has presented some embarrassing features. Had the Cunard line been just when the Government was next to powerless, it would have the mails now.

THE DEMOCRATS AND THE LAST PENSION BILL.

The Democratic Party in Congress and in the country at the present time seem to be peculiarly unfortunate in the outcome of all their efforts to fasten upon the Administration or the Republican majority in Congress charges of corruption and maladministration. The last case is an effort to charge upon the Republicans in the House of Representatives inconsiderate action in passing the bill providing that pensions shall begin from the date of the death, which will add fifteen or twenty millions to the national debt. This bill was introduced into the House by Mr. SPEER, of Pennsylvania, a Democrat, reported back by him from the Pensions Committee, and supported by the Democrats who voted for it. It is unquestionably true that a majority of the House did not know the amount involved, and the credit is due to a Republican member, Gen. GARFIELD, that as soon as he ascertained the amount involved he moved that the bill be brought back from the Senate for reconsideration. In this he had no support from the Democrats.

THE LATEST PENSION AGENCY FRAUD.

Three or four different times since Gen. BAKER became Commissioner of the Pension Bureau he has made changes in the rules designed to enforce accuracy in the returns of agents and to detect any irregularities that might exist. The effect of the last order was to make the tests so severe that W. T. COLLINS, the agent for this district, could not comply. He refused to make an affidavit which was required to be made with his returns. The investigation, which immediately followed, proved that he was in default to the Government to the amount of several thousand dollars, but exactly how much has not been discovered. Pension agents, in drawing checks, are required to make them out so they will show upon their face the purpose to which the money is to be applied, so that he must have been taking the money in small amounts for some time, making fraudulent checks which would appear to be regularly drawn. There are eight or ten bondsmen, and they have been duly informed that they will be held responsible for the defalcation. When the full amount has been ascertained, suits against them will be instituted. Mr. COLLINS is one of the Grand Army appointees, as have been the other dishonest pension agents, and it illustrates the need of other qualifications in the civil officers of the Government than former service in the Union army. This exposure will have rather a demoralizing effect on the opposition to civil service reform, which has been constantly made by the Grand Army Journal, of which Mr. COLLINS is editor. The case has some very pitiable features in it. COLLINS was wounded in the army, and one of his legs was amputated at the hip-joint—one of the few successful operations of the kind. He has ever since suffered at times from the effects of the amputation, and the suffering has been increased by any kind of excitement. The exposure of his conduct has brought him almost to the point of death, and yesterday his physicians were much alarmed at his condition. This morning he was somewhat better; but painful as the case is, the penalties of the law will be speedily applied.

THE EDUCATION BILL.

The House debate on Mr. HOAR'S Educational bill was animated today, and indicated that the proposition is growing in favor among the Republicans. Mr. SHELLABARGER made one of his strongest speeches, arguing the constitutionality of the measure. Some allusions to the Delaware whipping-post excited the ire of Mr. BRIGGS, who is a colored keeper of the good name of that State in the House. He retorted by abusing Massachusetts for the number and character of the crimes therein committed in a style that was both fierce and funny. Mr. BIGGS improved the opportunity to repudiate the passive policy, so far as he and Delaware were concerned. A vote on the Educational bill will be taken on Tuesday.

CLAIMS.

The House Committee on Claims has nearly 800 bills on its calendar, and is holding daily sessions for the purpose of preparing as many as possible for report and action when the Committee is called. An important principle, affecting a certain class of claims, was established by the Committee yesterday. There are quite a number of cases wherein subordinate officers who have temporarily filled by assignment the places of their superiors, have claimed the pay of the superior position for the time they occupied it. One such case was a former chief clerk of the Land Office and a former chief clerk of the Navy Department. The Committee decided adversely to the claims in both instances, and all like cases fall to the ground.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

THE COAST DEFENSES.

Major JAMES G. BENTON has been assigned, under orders of Chief of Ordnance, to the duty of superintending the armaments of the forts on the sea-coast from Charleston, S. C., to Mobile, Ala. Capt. A. THE PUBLIC DEBT.

An official statement issued by the Secretary of the Treasury shows that the public debt has decreased from March 1, 1869, to Feb. 1 of the present year from $2,725,453,260 01 to $2,398,204,949 50. The aggregate decrease in the annual interest charge since March 1, 1869, is $17,899,894 44.

THE HORNET.

The case of the steamer Hornet was under consideration in the Cabinet today, and there was some discussion as to the matter of allowing that vessel to leave Baltimore without an investigation. The whole subject was, however, referred to the Attorney-General. All members of the Cabinet were present excepting Secretary ROBESON.

CALLING IN THE THREE PER CENT. LOAN.

The Secretary of the Treasury today called in $1,750,000 of the three per cent. temporary loan, embracing the following numbers: $5,000, Nos. 3,202 to 3,414, and $10,000, Nos. 3,198 to 3,343. Interest on the above certificates will cease March 31, after which time they will be no longer available as a portion of the lawful money reserve in possession of any national banking association.

THE NEW-YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD TAX.

HORACE F. CLARKE, AUGUSTUS SCHELL, Mr. WORCESTER and several other attorneys and officers of the New-York Central Railroad Company arrived in this city today, and will to-morrow appear before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to argue against the tax on their scrip dividend of $23,000,000.

THE SALT INTEREST.

Dealers Before the Committee of Ways and Means.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 2.—The Committee of Ways and Means today continued the hearing of the salt dealers. Judge COMSTOCK concluded his argument, contending that there was no scarcity of native resources from which reasons could be drawn that salt ought to be duty free. A capital of $15,000,000 is invested in its manufacture. Under the ad valorem tariff of fifteen per cent., in 1858 and 1860, the duty on 14,000,000 bushels produced only $200,000, while under the present law, the duty on 12,000,000 bushels produced $1,250,000. He referred to petitions of revenue reformers in favor of the repeal of the duty on salt, and in this connection asked these reformers to show that a less duty would produce more revenue to the Government than the sum he had stated. The individual consumption of salt is thirty-three pounds to each person annually, the duty being six cents, which would not buy as good a cigar as any gentleman of the Committee would smoke. The point made was that such a repeal or sudden and violent change on salt would destroy that interest. Hon. JOHN F. DRIGGS said if the salt had sold anywhere as high as three dollars a bushel in the country, as quoted yesterday, it was from some extraordinary cause, such as difficulty of transportation to some particular localities, or, perhaps, owing to destruction of salt by fire at Chicago and other places. The average price of salt at Saginaw, where Mr. DRIGGS has salt works, was about $1 32 per bushel within the last year. One reason for the cheapness of manufacture is, he presumed, fuel cheap, it being the refuse of the lumber mills, and comparatively at cost price. If wood had been purchased at the ruling prices all the profits would have been absorbed. H. M. FITZHUGH, President of the Saginaw Salt Manufacturing Company, agreed with the views expressed by Judge COMSTOCK, showing it was impossible for salt manufacturers to form monopolies, the discoveries of brine being too extensive for this purpose in various parts of the country.

THE WEATHER.

Synopsis and Probabilities.

Murder in a Fit of Jealous Rage.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Feb. 2.—JAMES STOUGH and wife, old and respected residents of Richmond, Ky., became involved in a quarrel yesterday, when he plunged a clasp-knife into her breast and abdomen fifteen or twenty times. Jealously is said to have been the origin of their difficulties. He was under the influence of liquor yesterday, and they were alone at the time of the butchery, but some neighbors entering the house soon afterward found Mrs. STOUGH on the floor in a pool of blood. She lived only long enough to tell the terrible story.

Preparations for the Republican National Convention.

From the Philadelphia Telegraph, Feb. 2.

The Republican National Convention meets in this city on the 4th of June next, and preparations are being already made for it. The Academy of Music has been engaged for three days and three nights for the sessions. It is proposed to floor over the parquet on a level with the stage, the delegates to occupy benches, and the rest of the house to be used for spectators. At the Continental rooms have been engaged by Ex-Gov. CLAFLIN, of Massachusetts; R. G. HARRISON and Gov. NOYES, of Ohio, with forty-two delegates, and I. D. PRATT, of Connecticut, with nine delegates. Parlors for headquarters have also been engaged by Mr. CHANDLER, Chairman of the New-Hampshire Committee, and JOHN W. FOSTER, Chairman of the Indiana Committee. At the Girard House rooms are engaged for 150 members the "Lincoln Club" of Pittsburg, with their band of twenty-five performers. Gen. SIMON CAMERON will also stop at the Girard House.

Steam Boilers, Economy and Efficiency—Thorough Investigations—Report of Committee of American Institute.

Prof. THURSTON, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, in Hoboken, read, last night, at the meeting of the American Institute, his report of the competitive trials of steam boilers exhibited at the recent Fair of the American Institute. This report, which covers forty-five pages of manuscript, largely with numerical results of observations and calculations deduced therefrom, is probably the most thorough thing of the kind which has ever been carried out.

The apparatus used in making the measurements of evaporative efficiency was most extensive and thoroughly complete in every detail, and the trials, extending over many weeks, were conducted with the greatest care under Prof. THURSTON'S direction, and with assistance from several of the students of the Stevens Institute. The results speak favorably for all the boilers examined, the average efficiency being eighty per cent of the maximum force involved in the combustion of the fuel. The Blanchard boiler, with mechanical draft and feed-water heater, was shown to be the most economical; the Root, Allen, Phlegar and Lowe boilers were about equal in this respect, while the Root was perhaps the safest, and the Allen showed greatest steaming capacity. In the Lowe boiler the provision for combustion of furnace gases deserved special praise. The Committee finally recommended the construction of a thousand-horse power for this sort of testing, and that such trials should be part of the regular programme of future exhibitions.

We learn that memorials have been presented to Congress from the Faculties of the Stevens Institute of Troy, and other like bodies, recommending the continuation of the experiments so successfully inaugurated at Sandy Hook by the Camden and Amboy Railroad under the direction of Mr. FRANK STEVENS.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

Troubles of the Government—An Unfortunate Appointment—An Onslaught of Critics—Three Censors—The Government and the Catholic Bishops—The Recovery of the Prince of Wales—The Tichborne Case.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Jan. 20, 1872.

Yesterday afternoon the first Cabinet council since the Christmas Holidays was held; and it is understood that the chief question under discussion was the best way of getting out of the scrape into which Mr. GLADSTONE and the Lord Chancellor have fallen with regard to the appointment of the late Attorney-General (Sir R. COLLIER) to be one of the paid Judges of the Committee of the Privy Council. By the act of last session, which was in fact framed by Sir R. COLLIER himself, it was expressly provided that no one who had not actually been a Judge of one of the Superior Courts should be eligible for this position; but this act was dodged by making Sir ROBERT a Judge of the Common Pleas. He went through the farce of taking the oath and sat on the Bench for a day or two, and was then transferred to the Privy Council. While in the Common Pleas he happened to ask an advocate who was arguing a case what he would call a particular trapsaction of an equivocal kind, to which some reference had been made. "I should call it, my Lord," replied the counsel, in his most sonorous voice, "a gross evasion of an act of Parliament." Sir ROBERT did not venture to open his lips again. There is, of course, only one opinion on this subject at the Bar, and the Chief-Justice of England, with the concurrence of the entire Bench, has protested against the dangerous precedent which has thus been established. To the appointment itself there is no objection, only to the way in which it has been made. The Lord Chancellor was expressly chosen for his well-known piety and theological enthusiasm when the Government was formed; it was thought his religious character would help the attack on the Irish Church, and everybody knows Mr. GLADSTONE's faith in the divine inspiration which directs his slightest and most trivial acts. It required the conjunction of two such highly conscientious and pious men to perpetrate so deliberate and wanton an evasion of the statute. The rest of the Ministers are, I believe, unanimous in condemning it, and if the question is raised in Parliament, as it is sure to be, the Premier in one House and the Chancellor in the other, will have to trust to their own defense. It has been rumored that the Chancellor will resign, but this would rather injure than help Mr. GLADSTONE, since it would look as if he had sacrificed a friend to save himself. It would be absurd to turn out the Government on such a matter, but some protest against a repetition of the trick is inevitable. The chorus of criticism with which the Government is assailed from its own side continuous to be sharp and vexing. Three stinging tongues have been at work this week.

THE THREE CENSORS.

Prof. FAWCETT, Mr. ROEBUCK, and Mr. HORSMAN have each had their say. When Prof. FAWCETT was quite a lad he was out rabbit shooting with his father, who by accident discharged some small shot into his son's eyes and blinded him. Young FAWCETT was a smart, cleverish youth, with a good deal of energy and pertinacity. He had a good education in spite of his blindness, and his infirmity brought him much sympathy and consideration. He has lived a kind of petted life, and what would have seemed very commonplace and even childish observations for a man in the full possession of his senses, have been received as something wonderful coming from a blind man. In debate he has been more tenderly handled on this account than has been altogether good for him, and he has got into a dogmatic way of laying down the law at the top of his voice which is more tiresome than effective. At least, however, he deserves respect for the courageous independence with which, as a Radical, he has protested against the danger of relieving the working classes of their fair share of taxation, though, of course, nothing less could be expected from a professor of political economy who was true to himself and his science. Mr. ROEBUCK is best known by the nick-name which he once bestowed upon himself, "I'm the old dog Tear 'em," he said, "trust me for that." It must be admitted that he has sometimes snarled with good effect, and has not been afraid to use, as well as to show, his teeth when occasion required it. He led the attack on the Government for its mismanagement of the Crimean War, and he has generally continued to be a thorn in the side of Ministers, especially of his own party. But after all, a life of yelping and snarling does not bring with it much sympathy or respect. ROEBUCK's criticism has been purely destructive, and on most of the great questions of the day he has generally been wrong. It will be remembered that he and Mr. LINDSAY, the ship-owner, (who is still alive, but sank into mere commercial obscurity,) made themselves conspicuous by negotiating with the Emperor NAPOLEON for a joint English and French intervention in the American civil war—a proposal which the Emperor favored, but which was universally scouted in England. At one time ROEBUCK and DISRAELI were a good deal pitted against each other, and the latter once treated the House of Commons to an amusing sketch of his antagonist—describing him as "the Inquisitor-General" of the House, and sneering at his meagre and acid intelligence, of the crab-apple type, "his melodramatic malignity and Sadlers' Wells' sarcasm, wagging the finger and bating the breath, speaking daggers but using none." A little withered old man, with puckered, yellow face, leaning on a stick, sinking his voice every now and then to a hissing whisper, and pointing his finger with a kind of malignant thrust, ROEBUCK really has a good deal the look of a vicious witch, muttering incantations over her caldron of hell-broth. HORSMAN, the third censor of the Government, is a man of a different type from the other two. FAWCETT has the bumptiousness of a philosopher who has had the misfortune never to have been told what nonsense he talks. ROEBUCK represents a morbid acidity of temperament; but HORSMAN is neither intrusively bumptious nor personally malicious. He is the type of the very superior person in politics who looks down from his eminence with mingled pity and contempt, and an occasional hint of advice for the ordinary mortals who are struggling and blundering below. His speeches are terse, vigorous and epigrammatic, and often contain much good matter. He writes them out over and over again, each time destroying the copy and rewriting another from memory, till he has got it thoroughly by heart—so thoroughly that he can even venture to interpolate anything that occurs to him while speaking without being afraid of losing the thread of his story. But somehow his speeches are not very effective, and he has little or no influence as a politician. The reason is, I take it, because he is not a rough and ready politician; he does not make enough allowance for men and things as they are, and does not grasp the first principle of statesmanship—that it is better even to go wrong a little or run the risk or going wrong by doing a thing promptly, than to peddle and procrastinate in the hope of some day hitting on a course of perfect wisdom. During the Reform debate BRIGHT described him as a Skye terrier, as to which it was impossible to say what was the head and what the tail. He was once Irish Secretary, but gave it up because, as he said, there was nothing for him to do but to hunt. The resident Secretary at Dublin did all the real work. Since then he has not appeared on the Treasury bench, and the tide of political life has drifted past him. He paddles about in a shallow back-water and amuses himself by splashing the crews in the main stream. These three critics harped on pretty much the same strings, each in his peculiar way—the headstrong blundering of the Government, its crotchetiness and want of common sense, its perverse favor for indirect ways of doing things, and its administrative weakness. FAWCETT, however, thought they were too backward, and the other two that they were too advanced in their policies.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE CATHOLIC BISHOPS.

Cardinal Archbishop CULLEN, a clerical absolutist of the most inveterate type, an ultramontanist of ultramontanists, has just exploded a great Communistic explosion against the Government, with a view to force its hand on the education question. As I mentioned before, the priests favored the home-rule movement, in the hope of frightening the Ministers into bargaining for their help to stamp it out. On the one hand, however, Ministers have not been so much alarmed as was expected, and, in the next place, the priests discovered reason to feel uncomfortable on their own account, lest the movement should get beyond their control. So, for the present they are disposed to be meek and mild, to word their demands moderately and persuasively, and with just a hint of what they may be driven to do if they are refused. No matter how they may be described, however, their demands always come to the same thing; they mean nothing less than the surrender of a large number of schools to the absolute management of the Church. For example, it is complained that Catholic emblems and religious services are not permitted to be intermingled with the teaching in schools which happen to be exclusively attended by Catholics. It is true that there are a considerable number of schools which at present are attended only by Catholics, but Protestants might at any time migrate into the district and desire to share the advantages of the schools. It is obvious that if the priests get an absolute hold on a certain number of schools, and were allowed to do just what they pleased in them, on condition that only Catholics attended, they would take very good care that Protestants should be kept at a distance, by fair means or foul. It would be as much as to say to the priests, if you can keep Protestants out of districts which are now exclusively Catholic, these shall be your own territories, to be governed in your own way. The only principle on which a genuine national system of education can be established is that the schools shall be so conducted that Catholic children can attend Protestant schools, and Protestant children Catholic schools without any danger of being proselytized. As to University education, as long as the State has full authority to decide what kind of knowledge shall be deemed to constitute a thorough education of a high kind, there is no reason why students of all religions and from all colleges, Catholic or Protestant, should not be allowed freely to compete for honors and fellowships. And this concession will probably be made.

THE THANKSGIVING FOR THE PRINCE OF WALES.

To-morrow there will be a general thanksgiving for the recovery of the Prince of WALES in all the churches, and it has also been decided, as you will have already heard, to hold a great service of the same kind in St. Paul's. The Queen will go in state, attended by the high dignitaries of the Kingdom, and the Houses of Parliament, and the Prince is himself expected to be present. The day has yet to be fixed, but it will probably be the first Wednesday after the 20th of next month. At first it was proposed that the Queen, when she opened Parliament, should go to Westminster Abbey, afterward for the thanksgiving; but this was overruled, partly on the Queen's account, the physicians fearing that the fatigue and excitement would be too much for her, and partly on account of the people who would have been deprived of a good part of the show, the Houses of Parliament being not far from Buckingham Palace, and the Abbey being just on the other side of the road from the Legislature. From Buckingham Palace to St. Paul's is a distance of some three miles, and the loyal subjects of her Majesty will thus be treated to a good view of her on the drive past. Thanksgivings of this kind have fallen out of fashion in our time, and there are some doubts as to the propriety of reviving them. When the Prince was supposed to be dying not a few clergymen refrained from praying for his recovery, lest he should be already dead; but of course there would have been as much reason for praying that he might be raised from the dead as in praying that he might be prevented from dying, and no clergyman will deny that the one is just as much within the power of the Deity as the other. In Queen ANNE's day, the great Duke of MARLBOROUGH, it seems, kept Her Majesty briskly trotting between St. James' and St. Paul's to return thanks for his recurring victories. After the recovery of GEORGE III. from a serious illness in 1789, and several years later, after the three naval victories obtained by HOWE, ST. VINCENT and DUNCAN, that monarch attended a thanksgiving in the same cathedral. The King and Queen were driven to St. Paul's in a chariot drawn by eight cream-colored horses "amid the loyal acclamations of a great crowd of people." On the second of these occasions, however, Mr. PITT was not very well received, and in the afternoon he stayed to dine with some of the Judges in Doctors' Commons, and was escorted home by a detachment of the London Light Horse. Let us hope that Mr. GLADSTONE will not require a similar body guard, for I am afraid the London Light Horse has vanished, like many other glorious institutions, into the dim past, though there are still two good regiments of infantry volunteers in the city. Just now the Queen is at Osborne, in the Isle of Wight, and is better in health than she has been for a long time. Mr. and Mrs. GLADSTONE have been spending a few days with her, and talking over the arrangements for the thanksgiving and the opening of Parliament. The Prince of WALES continues to progress steadily toward recovery. This week he has been able to leave the sick-room, where so many anxious vigils were kept, for his own sitting-room. He is still very weak, but has a fair appetite and good spirits. He knows, of course, that he has been dangerously ill, but I believe it has not yet been deemed prudent to disclose to him the fact that the nation had really begun to mourn him as dead, lest the shock should be too great for him. Prince ARTHUR is at Berlin, on a visit to his sister and for the purpose of studying the military system of Prussia. Until the Prince of WALES' health is fully re-established, the Duke of EDINBURGH will remain at home, in order to do duty for him, if necessary, on State occasions. He may, however, pay a flying visit to his future subjects, if they will have him, in Saxe-Gotha.

THE TICHBORNE CASE.

There has been a good deal of comment on the very strong language in which the Attorney-General began by describing the claimant in his speech for the defense in this case. But it was really necessary. The case has been the source of so much entertainment to the public, that people had conceived rather a good-natured, friendly feeling for the hero, without reference to any faith in his genuineness or respect for his character, just as one has a kindness for Falstaff, or any other rogue in a play. In most civil cases there is no excuse for abusing either party. It may be assumed that perhaps neither side is quite in the right, and that if either is wrong, it is through a misapprehension in which there is no moral obliquity. But here there is no middle course, no possibility of compromise. Either the claimant is the real ROGER or a most atrocious villain, and it is necessary to bear in mind the possibility of his being a villain in order to value his evidence at its proper worth. If he is not, of course he and one or two others who are mixed up with him in the conspiracy, are capable of any amount of perjury, forgery and other villainies. Sir J. COLERIDGE has now spoken for five days, and it is expected that he will speak for four or five days more. The object of his speech was, in the first instance, to show how the claimant's knowledge of the affairs of the TICHBORNE family might have been obtained from books or from his fellow-conspirators; how slender and imperfect it was when DE CASTRO first began to call himself TICHBORNE, and how completely, up to the last, it was limited to just such matters as the people around him could communicate to him. The most important thing in the new matter is the production of an old pocket-book, alleged to have belonged to the plaintiff in Australia, in which he seems to have practiced writing the name of ROGER C. TICHBORNE, and to have put down various memoranda, which betray alike a general ignorance of the TICHBORNE family and a curious fancy for noting down things relating to them. The Attorney General also dwelt on the claimant's relations with the ORTON family, on his visits to Wapping, and Tichborne Park, before going to see ROGER's mother; on his avoidance of ROGER's friends and kinsfolk, and his refusal to see anybody unless attended by his attorney, and so on. I have not heard what is the market price of TICHBORNE bonds this week.

THE COST OF LIVING.

"Give Us Cheap Rents."

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

All very well for your rich and poor correspondents to say how they live on various sums from $1,000 to $5,000 per year, but I contend that a married man, with ever so economical a wife, and ever so "wee a babby," cannot exist decently in New-York under $3,000 per annum, and then he must not be a patron of the theatres or the arts; he must not drink, or use tobacco, and cannot afford more than one of the household curses, misnamed "helps." There are thousands of well-educated toilers in this mighty maelstrom who are eking out a scanty subsistence on $800, $1,000 and $1,500 per annum, but they will tell you how they are pinched for necessities, and never dream of luxuries; for them the syren sings in vain; for them the splendor of fairy spectacles is a dream; the landlord, the butcher, baker and candlestick-maker takes the romance out of them, through their squeezed pockets. Give us cheap rents and reduce the taxes, and we will then answer for the rest.

ONE OF THE CLERKS.

Not a Very Miserable Bachelor.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have read, with very much interest, the various articles, in your paper relative to the "cost of living." It strikes me that if some of these parties had "counted the cost" before entering into the matrimonial state, there would not be such a long list of grumblers and fault finders. We would, without doubt, have more old bachelors, but we would have less misery and "scratching" to obtain a living. The writer is a single man, twenty-five years of age, receives a salary of $2,000 per annum, and manages to dispose of it in the following manner:

Board, per year	$624 00	Cigars and tobacco.	$30 00
Clothes	300 00	Church	50 00
Commutation on railroad	78 00	Summer vacation	100 00
Papers and periodicals	17 68	Sundries	240 32
Amusements	50 00	Balance for savings bank	500 00
Total			$2,000 00

The item of sundries includes gloves, &c., and presents during the Holidays. I am, like "O. B.," a very happy young man, have all I need, in season, as regards luxuries, have a first-rate home, and see no good reason for changing my lot, in order to have a "good little wife" and eat "scrapple." A Letter to "Scotia."

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

If "Scotia" really desires to benefit his fellow-men in the matter of reducing household expenses by cheap buildings, he would be likely to succeed by detailing the results of his experience in the new mode he refers to, (Jan. 31.) If, as I suspect, his plan looks to the use of artificial stone, he will confer a great favor upon me at least, and, no doubt, upon every one of your readers who hopes some day to build a house of his own upon economical principles, if he will state whether his success has been obtained with some of the patent stones and processes, or with one of those free-to-the-public methods which I have found lately dwelt upon in my scientific paper—namely, hydraulic cement mixed with but ding-stone and coke-dust, or with equal parts of iron filings, and with which, it is claimed, an entire fire-proof house can be built in molds; walls, partitions, floors and roof, at wonderfully small expense. If Scotia's experience has proved this statement to be true and practicable, its results will go a long way toward solving the problem of cheap buildings and cheap rents, and you and he will become public benefactors by diffusing such important information. Management of Small Incomes.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I see so much about economy in housekeeping I would like to say a few words. There are many of our families who have to live on a small income and still make a good appearance. Some can do this, and some cannot; but if we all make up our mind, and not blame it all to our wives, or to some woman or another, we will soon find we are as much to blame as our wives.

Most of the men of today do not know what to ask for when they go to market; they do not know a porter-house steak from any other, and if they chance to know this much, will not be able to tell if it is cut right. I mean what I say, cut right, for most of our butchers cut their meat to sell, and not as it should be cut.

Again, a great many people fry their beef steaks. I asked a good doctor what he thought of the frying-pan. He said "it was one of the devil's inventions," and I think it is. A steak fried is a poor dish; a steak broiled is a fine dish. And again, mutton chops are often cut so far up in the fore shoulder as to be worth nothing and then fried. I could go on through the whole list of meats. The old proverb comes to my mind, that "God sends the victuals, but the devil sends the cooks," and I would add the butchers and carvers are of his set. Let the gentlemen learn how to buy, and what to buy, and how much to buy, and then attend to it. And it is the same with almost everything else—it is bought either too much, or not enough. I say, away with this notion that the woman is all to blame. If we want to live economical, and within our means, let our wives know just what our means are, and how much we can afford, and in nine cases out of ten you will not find the wife wanting; but let the husband be as economical as the wife; not let him leave her at home, to lunch on a piece of dry bread or cake, and a cup of tea, and he have a piece of roast beef and hot potatoes down town. Let him take his lunch with him, and my word for it, in most cases all will come out right.

A man must live within his means, and any man can do it, and any man and his wife can do it. I think and know two people can live cheaper than one in proportion, and a great deal. For I have tried it. I believe the fun that the house is the one that throws away the most money foolishly; he smokes, and must take a drink once in a while; and must play billiards, and a dozen or more things that the wife does not.

Economy is like charity, it begins at home.

I am a friend of mothers, wives, daughters, and all women. W. D.

P. S.—I am a constant reader of the DAILY TIMES, and you are doing the nation a great good in your noble work. Well done, is the cry for the NEW-YORK TIMES.

The Experience of a Family.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have read several communications on the cost of living in this vicinity, and am inclined to favor the view taken by the first commentators, that it is not an easy matter to live on $5,000 a year, for a man of family, at least, who would keep himself aloof from low or vulgar associations. New-York is confessedly the dearest place of its size in the known world to live in. The efforts to introduce the Parisian system of "flats," and the very distant projects for establishing cheap communication between the upper and lower end of the Island, all show how great is the tax on the labor of our inhabitants for shelter and home comforts. This ought not to be, for New-York has a back country as rich as that which surrounds Paris, Berlin, London or Vienna, with much cheaper means of ingress and egress. Let me tell you how I solved the problem of how to live in independence and comfort on a salary of $3,000 a year. Finding myself, with wife and two children, in one of our model boarding-houses in the upper part of New-York, at a cost of $30 per week, besides $5 per week average for extras, I soon discovered that to provide clothing and pay car-fares, doctor's bills, amusements, &c., used up the remainder of my salary, and at the end of the year I found myself with a slight deficit to be made up from the following year's pay. My wife and I had a serious deliberation on the subject and resolved to try housekeeping. We hunted the City over for weeks without finding a small house less than $2,000 per annum, (except a few which were either near tenement buildings, undertaker's shops, bagnios or livery stables.) At this rate we could not get further away than a block from tenements and fever-nests. A year's trial satisfied us that renting houses in New-York was a dead weight upon my industry that I could never afford. There was a sure prospect of everlasting drudgery, and in case of accident my family would be left penniless.

Another deliberation, and we concluded to try out-of-town residence. We spent months in selecting a suburban residence, and finally hit upon a cozy little cottage on the line of the Central New-Jersey Road, where we could have an acre of ground, a house in full of rooms at one of our $2,000 New-York houses, with surroundings vastly superior, at a rent of $1,200 a year. We had ground enough to raise nearly all our vegetables, which I took great pleasure in working at morning and evenings; also flowers and fruits in abundance. We kept from the refuse of the table a dozen chickens, which gave us fresh eggs the year round. Butchers' carts sold us at the door wholesome meats at a fair price, and we found that in the first year I found such an improvement that we were able to live better, dress better, keeping better and healthier than before. Gas, pavements, police and schools about the same as in the city. I concluded, however, that the rent was still very nearly dead loss, and that we ought to own our own home. Attached I could not be turned out at a landlord's option. I persuaded the owner to sell, and purchased on easy terms, and am now paying in interest on deferred payments and taxes, $750 a year. All I expend is on my own property, which is steadily improving in value. Although thirteen and a half miles from the Liberty-street ferry, my trip in to the City is made with great regularity in forty minutes, and at an average cost of twelve cents. The children romp on our own lawns, and we can, if need be, visit the theatres or lectures in New-York and return with as much ease as before. I now save $1,000 a year from my salary. Let the discontented go and do likewise.

Yours, URBS IN RURE.

WEST ELIZABETH, N. J., Wednesday, Jan. 31, 1871.

A Lady's Criticisms.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I am exceedingly amused, like "Roseleaf," at the various estimates of household expenses printed in your paper. "Eureka" says "American mothers would do well to rear their daughters as housekeepers." I would like to ask how many American fathers rear their sons by example, if no other way, to chew, smoke, drink and belong to some club, instead of teaching them how to become good husbands, and fathers of families in their turn? Then here is "Constant Reader" says they practice the strictest economy, and can't save anything out of an income of $5,000, while "Brooklyn," a family of moderate size, can live handsomely and bring up and educate the little ones on $1,500. Perhaps, "Constant Reader" forgot to state, as did your "Old Bach." friend, that he has a craving for social pleasures and various other little indispensables under the head of sundries.

But the most refreshing of all is the correspondent who sends his wife to the accommodating relatives with the bank account. I should advise that wife to have a few of those checks secured to herself and little ones, for fear the $1,200 might give out entirely.

I will not give my own experience, as, perhaps, I could not make out a parallel case, living in the country. Our receptions consist mostly of marriages in high life, where the beautiful presents to the bride are given mostly by loving relatives. We are waiting patiently for WOODWARD & FITCH to finish their new opera-house, so that we may have a change in the programme. But, really, it seems good, in these days of corruption, to know that some one thinks of these expenses, and how to meet them. I would like to ask "Franklin" if he would not be seen in company with that same lady that trailed a 14 per yard silk dress in the street, sooner than a plain modestly-dressed lady with a touch of poverty about her?

A WIFE AND MOTHER.

SOUTH NORWALK, Wednesday, Jan. 31, 1872.

A Rejoinder.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is very clear that the question of the cost of living will never be satisfactorily answered until some one settles what "living" means. I assume that it does not mean mere existence, nor yet a state of pampered luxury, but even with these divisions no one person can decide, for others will subdivide on what "luxury" means. The class of $5,000 correspondents, so to speak, put in as necessary items house rent at $2,500 per annum, and two (yes, three, sometimes,) servants to do the work of five people, at $300 for wages and at least as much more for their board! Even with these items, which I will not characterize as extravagances, lest I might seem rude, they lay up, one of them, nearly $1,000 per annum. In view of these facts, I ask, if one family can do this, why cannot another with the same care and attention to detail? Of course they can, if they so desire; but it seems to me that they rather seek to justify themselves in paying, in most cases one-fourth, in some, one-third, and in one confession quite one half of the net income for rent! This is, of course, their own affair, but is it any wonder that they cannot get on?

When one asserts that it is possible to live on $1,000, (four persons,) people who are incredulous hold up their hands in amazement and say it is impossible, then they straightway sit down and write to the TIMES, showing that they have seven or eight in the family, they spend so and so much for "balls," "company," "cigars," "carriage-hire," "two servants," &c., and say it is not possible to live on the sum named! Of course it is not, if that is termed "living;" why not go a scale or two higher, and say one can't buy a farm out of $1,000 a year? it would be quite as much to the point.

I live upon chops, steaks, fish, oysters and poultry. I eschew such things as pork, liver, fresh pork, scraps in whatever shape, beeves' hearts, or any other devices and make-shifts to cheat a man out of a wholesome meal. I assert that with the above I can present a bill of fare for four persons that the most fastidious will approve at a cost for living not to exceed $1,000 a year.

Specifically, my grocer's bill is per year, $246; butcher, $150; milk, $52; clothes, $250; tea, $12; butter, $52; coal, $100—total, $862.

This amount includes everything of the best possible quality. Lest any one accuse me of smuggling in a large quantity of codfish, or pork and beans, or dried apples, under the head of "groceries," I will assert on oath that the item of cod-fish does not exceed six per year, pork and beans never, ditto dried apples. It covers cost of light, vegetables and small wares generally.

There is no item for rent, which is a part of living properly. I assert that no one can afford to pay over one-third or their income for rent, which, on $2,000, would allow them say $666. For this sum one can get a whole house in a respectable neighborhood in the suburbs, large enough and good enough for all purposes. These items make the cost of living for four persons $1,213 per year; but if I were restricted to $1,000, it is not probable I should spend one-half of it on my table, as I now do.

Finally, I said on Sunday last that I paid no rent; but with the two items of service and rent included, I ran inside $1,550 per year. I hand you the above statement as an answer to "M." and "Inquirer," on the mere items alone. I do not think $1,000 is by any means enough to live on; but I do say that if people have no more, they can live better and more in it than they are alone, or better keeping house than in boarding. I began housekeeping in 1861 on $10 50 per week; lost time deducted from this sum, I made less than $500 per annum, yet I saved $60 that year. We became tired of paying rent some time ago, and I concluded to try myself for a landlord, and find I make a very nice one indeed; satisfactory in all respects.

I see no reason to withdraw my original statement, that four persons can live comfortably, and on the best the land affords, for $1,000 per year—bare cost of living, I ought to say, lest some person inquire how much I allow for a box at the opera.

I hand you my address for the benefit of "Inquirer." E. P. W.

Up-Town Transit—Another Plan—A Deputation to Albany.

At a meeting of the Committee of Ninety, of the Citizens' Association, on Thursday evening, a report was read by Mr. JOHN T. DALY, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Railroads, stating that efforts had been made to coalesce the different interests of the roads now in operation, and to pave the way for a comprehensive system of railway travel. This they had been unable to effect. The objections to the underground plan had been carefully examined, and the Subcommittee were prepared with facts and arguments for their full refutation. Every objection can be answered by reference to the actual experience of the present roads of London. The plan proposed is a road from the Battery to the Grand Central Depot, with a station at the City Hall Park. This with a sunken track on the line of Fourth-avenue to Harlem River, would be the first of a system to be afterward completed. The creation of a Railroad Commission was urged, to carry out the proposed plan, by City aid, if necessary. After some debate as to the probable expense involved—the estimates varying from $5,000,000 to $12,000,000—the report was adopted, and it was resolved that the Committee respectfully demand that the Legislature set aside all plans and speculators who have for ten years defeated this important work, and permit the people of New-York to construct at once an under-ground steam road from the Battery to Harlem, at the expense of the City, if necessary, and that the names of seven of our leading citizens, together with a bill creating this Commission, be submitted for the immediate action of the Legislature, and that a committee of twenty-four be appointed to proceed to Albany and urge the immediate passage of the bill. The following gentlemen volunteered to form a part of such Committee: John Foley, John T. Daly, John H. Strahan, John McDonald, Wm. M. Hoes, William R. Berghols, Lewis Ballard, W. H. Chesseborough, John D. McKenzie and Henry Clews.

MUNICIPAL MATTERS.

Department of Public Works—Estimated Expenses of the Departments for 1872.

The following communication, accompanied by a detailed estimate of the expenses of the Department of Public Works for the current year, was yesterday sent to Controller GREEN by Commissioner VAN NORT:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS, Feb. 2, 1872.

To the Honorable Controller of the City of New-York:

SIR:—I have the honor herewith to submit an estimate of the anticipated expenses of conducting that portion of the corporate business of the City of New-York, usually set apart, properly appertaining to the Department of Public Works, for the current year 1872. From an examination of the schedule herewith transmitted, it will be perceived that for aqueduct repairs and maintenance of supplies, printing and stationery for the various departments, Civil and Police Courts, repairing and keeping in order wooden and stone pavements, for meeting the heavy expense essential to lighting the City, (which alone amounts to $1,149,107,) aggregates $1,677,107. This very large amount, although less than the estimates made and presented for the two years preceding, would not be so excessive were it not apparent that repairs to public buildings and other essential matters are absolutely necessary to make the one habitable and the other prudential and expedient as well as fully economical.

Respectfully submitted,

CORNELIUS VAN NORT,
Commissioner of Public Works.

Aldermanic Doings—A Movement to Displace the Clerk to the Board of Aldermen—Resignation of Alderman Gilsey.

There was more than the usual amount of bustle, yesterday, in the offices of both Boards of Aldermen. A number of caucuses were held, but with what result could only be indefinitely ascertained. There is no doubt, however, that a strong effort is to be made to oust JOSEPH SHANNON from the clerkship to the Board of Aldermen. It will be remembered that SHANNON's election was stoutly opposed, the grounds taken against him being that he was not an earnest Reformer, and that he was not competent to perform the duties of the office. As reader to the Board it is claimed that he has already showed his utter incompetency. The movement to displace him is a strong one, and promises to meet with success.

Yesterday afternoon Alderman PETER GILSEY sent his resignation to the Mayor, presenting, as his reason for doing so, the urgency of his attention to his private business. It is understood that MORGAN JONES will be appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Mr. GILSEY.

In addition to the appointments previously made by the Board of Assistant Aldermen, JOHN QUINLAN has been chosen second assistant clerk of the Board, and has qualified in the necessary oath before the Mayor.

The Street-Cleaning Commissioners.

This Board met at the Controller's office, yesterday, present Controller GREEN, Recorder HACKETT, Mr. BOSWORTH, President of the Board of Health, and Corporation Counsel O'GORMAN. Previous to the meeting the members had a long private conversation. This lasted for nearly an hour after the time fixed for the meeting. The object of the meeting, as stated, was for the purpose of framing an answer to Assemblyman HEALEY's resolution requesting the Board to report to the Legislature a statement of all the contracts made by the Commissioner for cleaning the streets up to the present time, and also a statement of any and all payments made by the Street-cleaning Commissioners on those contracts.

The Injunction Against the Tammany Sachems—Motion to Dissolve It.

The case of JOHN SCOTT against the Tammany Society or Columbian Order came up before Judge BARRETT in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion to dissolve the injunction against the defendant. It will be remembered that the injunction was granted by Judge BARNARD restraining the sachems from putting in force a certain resolution excluding the Tammany General Committee, of which plaintiff is one, and which since the primary election is claimed to be in opposition to "the old barnacles who have clung to the institution so long, and now seek to cling to the exclusive use of the building."

Mr. JOHN E. DEVLIN appeared on behalf of sustaining the injunction, and AARON J. VANDERPOEL appeared to show cause why the injunction should be dissolved. Mr. VANDERPOEL took the preliminary objection to the injunction, that Judge BARNARD, when he granted it, was a trustee of the Society, and therefore incompetent to act, the statute providing that no Judge shall act in a case where he would be disqualified as a juror, and that this was such case. The affidavit of DOUGLAS TAYLOR was read, sustaining the assertion of Mr. VANDERPOEL, that Judge BARNARD was a trustee of the Society.

Mr. DEVLIN contended that this being a charitable society by the terms of its charter, no member of the Society or trustee could have any pecuniary interest in its property, and that only a pecuniary interest could disqualify the Judge from acting in the case.

Judge BARRETT said if the fact was uncontradicted that Judge BARNARD was a trustee at the time he granted the injunction, he would have no hesitation in declaring that he had such an interest in the Society as would disqualify him, and that on such a state of facts he would feel it his duty to vacate the injunction on the preliminary objection.

Mr. DEVLIN asked a delay until Wednesday next to procure testimony to offer the Court on the subject of Judge BARNARD's membership of the Society. He scarcely supposed it proper to require from a Judge of the Court a counter affidavit, but would procure a certificate of the fact.

Judge BARRETT said that course would be perfectly satisfactory to the Court, but if it was desired that he should decide the question it would be necessary that the certificate be handed in before 12 M. today, as at that hour his term ended at Chambers.

Mr. DEVLIN agreed to hand in the certificate by that time, and the case went over accordingly.

Minor Crimes and Casualties.

An affray occurred yesterday morning at a negro ball, in Twenty-fourth-street, near Sixth-avenue, during which WASHINGTON PARKS drew a pistol, when WASHINGTON GRANT, a friend, in attempting to take the weapon from him, was shot through the hand. All of the party escaped before the arrival of the Police.

CARSON G. DULANEY, aged twelve years, died yesterday at his home, No. 1,284 Fourth-avenue, from injuries received three weeks ago while skating in Central Park.

LIZZIE KOELER was arrested, yesterday, by Detective TILLY, and locked up at Police Headquarters, on a charge of stealing $600 from Mrs. C. BURK, of No. 437 Second-avenue, on the 10th of December last, when she was employed in the house as a servant.

MORRIS LEVI, aged thirty years, when getting off a Third-avenue car at the Bowery and Houston-street yesterday, with his child, aged three years, in his arms, was knocked down and both himself and child run over by car No. 44, of the Fourth-avenue line, the driver of which immediately sprang from his car and ran away. The child had both legs cut off, receiving fatal injuries, and the father had one leg and one arm broken. He was taken by his own request to the Mount Sinai Hospital.

At 11½ o'clock yesterday morning a fire occurred in the house No. 24 West Fifty-first-street, occupied by Dr. S. C. VAN NORMAN as a ladies' seminary, causing a loss of $1,000, on which there is no insurance. The building was owned by JAMES B. SWEET, and will require $300 for repairs, but is fully insured.

DANIEL SULLIVAN, a laborer, forty years of age, yesterday so brutally assaulted his wife, living at their residence, No. 160 Worth-street, that she was taken to Park Hospital in a precarious condition. He was arrested and committed by Justice DOWLING.

MARGARET WILLMORE died yesterday at Bellevue Hospital from burns received several weeks ago at her home, No. 28 Mott-street.

Serious Charges Against the Police—Detectives Accused of Black-Mailing.

Twenty-two Policemen were arraigned yesterday before Commissioner BOSWORTH. Detectives LAMBRECHT and LEONS, Nineteenth Precinct, were charged by Mrs. REBECCA GRANSON, of No. 1,571 Second-avenue, with extorting $250 from her in December, 1870. At that time she kept a liquor-store and bought some liquor of a man named SMITH, and after getting it, one SOLOMON SIEMS, accused her of having obtained it by fraud, and threatened to have her arrested unless she paid $100, part of which was to go to the detectives. The latter were arrested and kept three days when Mrs. GRANSON was told he would be set up for fifteen years unless she gave each of the officers $50. She said she paid the money and the bar-keeper was released without trial, after which the officers demanded $50 each and again threatened to arrest her. For the defense, SIEMS testified that he sold SMITH the liquor for Mrs. GRANSON, and was paid with a check which proved to be a forgery, and he then got his liquor back. He never paid the officers any money, nor promised them any, nor did he demand any for them from any one. The charge was dismissed.

PENSION FRAUDS.

Their Nature and Extent—Various Methods Resorted to to Cheat the Government—How the Dirty Work is Done.

There can be no doubt that the Government is largely defrauded by unscrupulous men who take advantage of its munificent provision for the men who have been disabled in serving the country in the field in the time of war. One-fourth of the pensions now paid, it is said, are fraudulent. They are in their nature exceedingly difficult of detection, as will appear upon a consideration of the methods in which the validity of claims is established, and under the existing laws it is very difficult for the agents of the Government to guard against this systematic swindling. All pensions are granted upon the ex parte statement of the soldier, and the Government is thus taken at a disadvantage. The applicants time of enlistment, period of service, rank, name of the company and regiment, are on file at Washington, of course, and readily accessible to the examiners in the P

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

No. 105.—The New-Haven Steam Transportation Company vs. The Steam-boat Continental and the New-Haven Steam-boat Company.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the District of Connecticut.—The libel is in rem. The action was brought to recover damages arising from a collision which occurred between the appellants' propeller Northampton and the appellees' steamboat Continental, near the entrance of the harbor of New-Haven, a little after 1 o'clock, on the morning of Oct. 23, 1868, whereby the Northampton was sunk. The District Court decided that the Northampton was in fault, in not having any stern light; that she was running in direct violation of law, which required her to have a central range of two white lights, and that this was the cause of the collision. The libel was accordingly dismissed. The Circuit Court affirmed this decree, and the case is brought here for review, where the appellants go over all the facts, insisting that the negligence was with the officers of the Continental.

C. Is Donohue, J. S. Bush and C. R. Ingersoll for appellants; E. G. Owen and T. C. Doolittle for appellees.

No. 394.—Borlinger vs. State of Iowa.—Error to the Supreme Court of Iowa.—This was a conviction under the Prohibitory Liquor law of the State, which declares that no person shall sell or give away, or keep with intent to sell, or manufacture spirituous liquors, &c., except for mechanical, medicinal, culinary and sacramental purposes, under penalty of a fine and imprisonment; and it is here contended that this act of the State is an abridgement of the privileges and immunities guaranteed to citizens of the United States by the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution. The case is submitted on the printed briefs.

W. T. Dittoe for appellant; Henry O'Connor, Attorney-General of Iowa, for the State.

No. 91.—Alden vs. The First National Bank of Chicopee.—Error to the Circuit Court for the district of Maine.—This was an action brought against Alden as an indorser of a promissory note. The makers of the note, who resided at Wilmington, Ill., sent it to Alden who, resides at Belfast, Me., without date or signature, or any written words upon its face, but simply with the figures $6,000 written in, with the request that he would indorse it for their accommodation. Alden wrote his name on the back of the note, and returned it to the makers, who completed it, and negotiated it to sue Ulmen, the second indorser thereon, at Chicago. The note, which was payable at Boston, was subsequently indorsed by Ulmen and the Ames Manufacturing Company, and was discounted by the bank in error (in the usual course of business, on the 13th April, 1868, without knowledge of any equities between the antecedent parties or of other facts. No suit was brought against the makers in their State or in Massachusetts; nor was there any evidence to prove that such a suit would have been unavailing, or that the maker of the note had left the State. On this state of facts the Court held that the indorser, Alden, was liable in the action under the laws of Massachusetts, where the note was payable, and the judgment was accordingly for the bank. It is here contended that as there was no liability on the part of the indorser until the note passed out of the hands of the makers—being purely an accommodation indorsement—his liability did not commence until the negotiation of the note at Chicago; that his contract was, therefore, made in Illinois, and the place of performance was as to him in that State, and not at Boston, where the note was payable, and where the makers were liable. If, therefore, the indorser's contract was not really made until the negotiation of the note, the contract was governed by the laws of Illinois, and there the suit against the indorser cannot be maintained until all remedies have been exhausted against the maker. Under the Illinois statute the liability of the indorser is contingent upon the failure to recover of the maker after due diligence, and if the indorser was not there liable until failure to recover from the maker, he is not liable anywhere until such failure.

J. J. D. Fuller for plaintiff in error; Bion Bradbury for defendant.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT.

Before Judge Benedict.

ACTION FOR DAMAGES AGAINST THE CAMDEN AND AMBOY RAILROAD.

George Clarence Cavender vs. The Camden and Amboy Railroad Company.—This action is one of three commenced in September, 1870, to recover damages for injuries received in July of that year. It appears that plaintiff is a little boy, who, in company with his mother, his grandmother, and a little baby, was waiting at the station at Burlington, N. J., to come to New-York. It is alleged that after the above-named parties had got on the platform the train started off in a great hurry. The sudden shock threw plaintiff and his grandmother off the cars. Plaintiff fell with one hand across the track, and the wheels of the cars passed over it, cutting off his fingers, and the grandmother also sustained serious injuries, although not so severe as those which were inflicted on her grandson. Three actions have been commenced against the Company, and on behalf of the above named plaintiff, to recover $15,000 damages, another by his grandmother to recover $8,000 damages, and the third by plaintiff's father, to recover $3,000 damages for the loss of service of his child.

The advices from Washington today are conclusive of the purpose of the Republican Congress to stand by the Secretary of the Treasury in his negotiations to reduce the burden of Annual Interest on the Public Debt. His vindication in the matter of the Syndicate is acknowledged as complete by every Republican member of the House of Representatives.

There is another item of news from the Capital, in regard to the views of the Administration on the Tariff, which should satisfy our Importers, as well as Free-Trade Leaguers, that no reduction of present Duties on articles coming in competition with American Industry is likely to receive the Executive sanction, assuming that such reduction, in the interest of Free Trade, to the prejudice of Domestic Labor, is to be seriously entertained by the present Congress. And this, we have reason to hold, would be a very violent presumption, as the outlook from Washington now affects the question.

If, therefore, the Opposition to the present Government are anxious to "go to the country" on the issues of the Tariff and of Public Debt Reduction, they need be at no loss to understand the pronounced opinions of the President and Secretary of the Treasury, which in the sequel of the present session, we believe, will be found in accord with the action of Congress.

Exchange on London is a fraction firmer today, while Gold through the forenoon seemed to work easier. The latter, however, was in better demand later in the day, and from 109¾@109¾ the quotation advanced to 109⅞@109⅞ ₱ cent. The sales of 60 days Bills on London (Bankers) were at 109@109⅛ ₱ cent.; Short Sight, 109¾@109⅞ ₱ cent.

Money was again active among the Brokers at 7 ₱ cent., and some signs were said to be apparent of a Bearish movement to lock up balances from the use of the Street to affect the Stock market. If there be anything serious in this purpose, a fair offset can be made, so far as the Stock Exchange and the Railway speculation are concerned, in the well-accredited report that at least one of the two or three wealthy and successful Bulls in the recent upward movement in the Western Roads, who were credited with selling out last week, has returned, in force to the market, for a fresh upward turn in prices, and ready to sell "privileges" to any extent on North-west and several other Western Stocks.

There was more business on the Exchange today than yesterday, and prices, as a rule, were higher, both on the Railroads and the Miscellaneous Shares. Among the latter Pacific Mail and Quicksilver Company attracted most attention. The Express Stocks were also higher, and the Railway Mortgages of established credit in good demand. The Public Funds of the United States left off steady at little or no variation from the quotations of Thursday. The New-York and Western Roads, while showing firmness at rather better rates, were not actually buoyant, and the demand appeared to hesitate as to really important purchases, near the close of Bank hours, because of the reported lock-up of Money. Later in the afternoon, Money was quoted at 7 ₱ cent., with exceptions as cheap as 5@6 ₱ cent., and it seems questionable, at this season of the year, whether a lock-up could be made successful for the purpose intended.

Messrs. WINSLOW, LANIER & Co. report only a few of the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company's First Mortgage 7 per Cent. Gold Bonds remain unsold. Price advanced to 96 and interest.

The advices by the European mail by the China today say that accounts from all the German cities indicate an extraordinary renewal of speculation, new banks and companies of all kinds being daily started and carried up to premiums, while the old investment stocks of the various German States and established institutions are at higher prices than have ever previously been reached.

The London Times states that a contract for a direct Atlantic cable has today been signed between the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company and an influential combination, represented by Messrs. BISCHOFFSHEIM and GOLDSCHMIDT. The same paper reports:

"Subscriptions have been invited by Messrs. SPEYER BROTHERS, for £900,000 first mortgage six per cent. bonds of the Baltimore and Potomac Railway Company, at the price of £89 8s. 9d., (being 4s 11½ 7-16d. per each barrel $1,000, at 4s. 9d. per dollar.) The funds are required for a great tunnel under the City of Baltimore, which will complete the only continuous line of locomotive railway between New-York, Philadelphia and Washington, and the mortgage is upon this portion of the undertaking, the tolls of which, at only half the legal rates, are estimated to yield 'more than sufficient to pay the interest on the loan,' while there is the additional security of a joint and several guarantee from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, whose capital is £8,000,000., and the Northern Central Railway Company, whose capital is £1,120,000. This guarantee is indorsed upon the bonds, the interest being made payable in London in gold by virtue of resolutions of the three companies."

BANKING AND FINANCIAL.

☞ ST. JOSEPH AND DENVER CITY RAILROAD COMPANY'S FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND LAND GRANT BONDS,

BEARING EIGHT PER CENT. (8 P. C.) INTEREST, PAYABLE IN GOLD,

FREE OF TAX,

AND IN DENOMINATIONS OF $1,000, $500 AND $100, can be obtained from the undersigned, or through the principal banks and bankers throughout the United States.

The attractive features of these securities are recognized in the fact that, although they have been but a short time on the market, they are nearly all absorbed, and but a small amount are now for sale.

They combine a perfect security with a liberal rate of interest. This interest account is made light for, and easily borne by, the Company, through the operation of the Sinking Fund created from sales of the Company's land, which, in many cases, draw interest at the rate of ten (10) per cent. per annum. The security behind them is ample in every particular, as they constitute a first and only mortgage on a trunk line of railroad which will soon connect the City of St. Joseph, Mo., (an important railway centre,) with the Union Pacific Railroad at Fort Kearney, materially shortening the distance between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. In addition to this, the bonds have further security in the fact that there is included in the Mortgage the Company's magnificent Lands, amounting to 1,500,000 acres, known to be among the best in the United States. The Mortgage Indenture prohibits the sale of these Lands at less than Four (4) Dollars per acre, and payable to the Trustees under the Mortgage, for the clear and express purpose of retiring these Bonds. The amount thus realized exceeds the entire amount of Bonds which can be issued, and leaves the road, property and franchises free.

The Bonds have thirty years to run, with interest at Eight per Cent., free of tax, payable in February and August in each year.

Both principal and interest are payable in gold.

The principal in New-York. The interest in either New-York, London or Frankfort-on-the Main, at the option of the holder, without notice, and in the gold currency of the country in which they are presented. They are coupons or registered.

Trustees—Farmers' Loan and Trust Company.

The present price of these Bonds is 97½ and accrued interest in currency, from Aug. 15, 1871. But they are receivable at par and accrued interest in payment for lands sold by the Company. The right is reserved to advance the present selling price without notice.

Maps, circulars, documents and full information furnished on application.

Though acting as agents for the sale of this loan, our firm buy and sell in their regular business the Bonds of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, those of the Eastern Division eight per cent. (8s.) recently placed by us at 97½, being now quoted at from 101½ to 102½ and accrued interest.

The officers of Internal Revenue, aided by the Police, made a raid upon the illicit still in the Fifth Ward yesterday. They seized about $5,000 worth of whisky and rum. The parties whose places were to be visited were evidently notified in advance, for many of the prominent illicit stills were found closed. The only feature of interest about the raid was that the Police took the place of the military. This was done in pursuance of the arrangement recently made by Supervisor DUTCHER and Hon. THOMAS KINSELLA with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The New-York Times.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential canvass. This department of the paper will be unusually full and trustworthy. Renewed enterprise will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-weekly editions; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

The House Committee on Cities has given another proof of its title to the confidence of the people by reporting the charter of the Committee of Seventy with no important amendments. We have already shown that the principle on which that charter is based is one that promises a just, honest, and efficient government for the City. This view is sustained by the report of a committee of unusually able and trustworthy men, selected with reference to their competency to judge of this particular matter. The charter is now in the hands of the Assembly, and on that body rests the responsibility of dealing with it. We hope it will do so promptly and fairly, and in a way to completely reverse the feeling that has been awakened with reference to its sincerity in reform. The great body of the people of New-York are represented in a peculiarly effective manner by the Committee of Seventy, and are willing to try the measure of relief which that Committee has worked up. They do not ask the Legislature to waive its own right to judge in the matter, but they do ask that full weight shall be given to the considerations that tell so strongly for the Committee's suggestions. The favorable report is a long step toward successful reform. Let us go the remainder of the way as soon as possible.

The memorial of the Bar Association, with reference to the Judiciary of this City, has been presented to the Assembly by Mr. ALVORD. TOM FIELDS made a pathetic appeal to the "gray hairs" of Mr. ALVORD, but Mr. ALVORD replied in a very forcible manner, and earned the thanks of the community by the honest stand he has taken on the question. If Mr. ALVORD should turn out to be one of the most useful reformers in the Legislature, there will be none more prompt or more delighted to acknowledge his services than ourselves.

We have still another step in advance to record. Col. HAWKINS introduced, yesterday, a bill for correcting the notorious abuses incidental to the present Quarantine system of the port—that system which is driving away our commerce and disgusting merchants, and which is profitable only to Dr. CARNOCHAN. The bill has been carefully prepared under the advice of experienced persons, and ought to pass. Altogether, the Legislature made a good day's work of it yesterday.

Up till yesterday we had no idea what a poor business is the running of street cars. The unfortunate companies, who were at great pains and expense to procure charters from the Legislature to give them the privilege of laying railroad tracks in the streets, have been set forth by the Secretary of the TAX COMMISSIONERS as public benefactors, who have been running themselves hopelessly into debt out of pure philanthropy, and whose surplus earnings are absolutely nil. This is about the sum of a "defense" of the Board of Taxes and Assessments against the charges of the TIMES, sent to several morning papers by Mr. E. F. BABCOCK. This gentleman states that we have "in some instances," refused publication to his "circumstantial refutations" of similar charges. If Mr. BABCOCK can make this accusation a little more definite, we may find space to answer it. Meanwhile, we may assure him that the missive to which we have referred would have secured a prompt insertion had it been sent us. That the President of the Third-avenue Railroad submitted a statement, showing, by a very obvious exercise of financial hocus-pocus, that his company is completely bankrupt and earns nothing, should neither relieve the Company from paying its due share of taxes, nor the Commissioners from the duty of levying them. Mr. BABCOCK gives us credit for knowing the power of "constant iteration." We shall try its efficacy still further upon the abuses of the Bureau with which he is connected.

We give today another chapter of the remarkable history of the disposal of MCBRIDE DAVIDSON'S safes. There is a good deal about the history of this department of municipal fraud which requires elucidation. Personal statements already published are sufficient to demand a suspension of judgment in regard to some of the names given today, till the accused parties have a chance of defending themselves.

Hank Smith's Defense Demolished.

We pointed out, yesterday, the striking discrepancies between the statement given by HANK SMITH, of the affairs of the bank of which he was President, and that which was the result of the labors of a Subcommittee of Investigation. The members of this Committee have come promptly forward to substantiate their report, and accompany their renewed contradiction of President SMITH with sundry extracts from the books of the bank, which are exceedingly damaging to the eminent politician, who has been so busily engaged, lately, in dispensing profuse hospitality to members of the Legislature at Albany. To the statement of HANK SMITH, that since 1869 he has had but little to do with the Bowling-green Savings Bank, Mr. JOHN FOX gives an explicit denial. So lately as July, 1871, he found SMITH engaged in the active supervision of the affairs of the bank, and so well posted about the condition as to be able to say that there were seventy thousand dollars of the funds lying idle for want of a good investment. On July 22, 1871, a statement of the affairs of the bank was issued, sworn to by President SMITH and Vice-President ROCHE, in which the bank was declared to be in possession of $419,100 worth of bonds, on which $307,873 had been lent. The Committee state as the result of careful investigation that these securities were not then in the possession of the bank, and that since its suspension not a dollar's worth of the bonds specified have been discovered. There is, moreover, railroad stock entered at forty thousand dollars in this statement, whose real value turns out to be only half this amount. In addition to the $307,873, which appear to have been lent without any collateral whatever, there is a further sum of $100,000 borrowed by personal friends of SMITH, ROCHE and SELMES, without anything more than mere personal security, and, as a climax to their charges, the Committee "declare emphatically" that $69,022 97 appear on the books of the bank as being "lent," under the following names, which are "purely fictitious," viz.: JOHN HALL, JOHN E. HALL, A. H. HART, B. C. HARNEY and J. S. HARRISON. Finally, the Committee expose the gross misrepresentation practiced by SMITH in estimating the value of SELMES' real estate.

Charges like these are sufficient, if substantiated, to send any man, exercising an important public trust, to the State Prison. No pettifogging plea of ignorance or want of suspicion can acquit the President of the Bowling-green Savings Bank from the gravest possible responsibility, if these charges remain unanswered and uncontradicted. Perjury and deliberate fraud are not very pleasant imputations for any one to rest under, when preferred by witnesses so trustworthy as the members of the Depositors' Investigating Committee of the Bowling-green Bank. Even the Tribune, which suddenly resumed the "sucking-dove" style of dealing with HANK SMITH yesterday, ought now to see that the very lame defense of its quondam friend and ally, stands in urgent need of being supplemented by something more definite. The depositors of the bank are to take up, on Monday next, the question as to whether SMITH, ROCHE and their associates cannot be criminally prosecuted for misappropriation of the funds intrusted to their keeping. If, as appears from the Committee's statement, there is sufficient ground for such prosecution, the community at large ought to aid the plundered depositors in a work which would be of eminent service to the maintenance of official responsibility, and the restoration of confidence in the savings-bank system which has lately received so many shocks.

The Approaching Session in England.

The most striking event which has recently occurred in English politics has been Lord DERBY'S speech at Liverpool. Lord DERBY occupies, in several respects, a unique position. The son of a renowned father, the representative of an ancient and vigorous race, the possessor of a princely fortune, indisputable capacity, and a philosophic temperament, there is absolutely no one who has so many claims to the consideration of the educated classes of his countrymen. With the exceptions of Mr. BRIGHT and Mr. GLADSTONE, he is probably the most influential man in England, and his outspoken advocacy of conservatism will be widely felt as a disappointment on the one hand and a triumph on the other.

Up to the present time, the idea has lurked in many men's minds that Lord DERBY has been "playing dark," that his adhesion to the Tory Party arose from a reluctance to oppose the opinions of his father, and that he was only awaiting such a tide in the affairs of his country as would enable him to lay aside the mask, and secede from the ranks of Mr. DISRAELI'S supporters. His speech at Liverpool has not merely settled this question. It has done far more. It has announced who, when Mr. DISRAELI now getting in years, retires, will be the Tory chief. Undoubtedly, then, this speech is a very important event to his party. Those who were strong believers in petticoat government will be apt to attribute the present move to its influence. Lady DERBY, to whom he has not long been married, is a woman of remarkable ability and strong conservative tendencies. Her stepson, the Marquis of SALISBURY, has the subtlest intellect and most incisive tongue in the House of Lords. When Secretary of State for India, he was deemed by the permanent officers of the India Office, by far the ablest administrator who had directed the affairs of that Empire within their recollection, and he, too, is the Tory husband of a Tory lady, of extraordinary social and political ability—the daughter of the eminent Senior Wrangler, Judge ALDERSON—who aspires to a place in the world of London such as has not been held by any woman since the days of GEORGIANA, Duchess of Devonshire. "What our party wants is a woman," said DISRAELI to a well-known Peeress. Lady SALISBURY intends to supply the vacancy.

The executive team with which Mr. GLADSTONE starts for the work of another session, is as weak as ever, and only a very strongly-supported driver could get along with it; but such a majority as he can command in the House of Commons, enables him to work with inferior tools, if he will only condescend to a little tact, in which he is deplorably deficient. His difficulty lies with lukewarm Liberals and Irish Roman Catholics. The former are, unless skillfully managed, terribly apt to fall into Tory pitfalls, while the latter might fail at a critical moment under superior orders from the head-quarters at Dublin. If these could be alienated at the same time, the Conservatives would win; but the difficulty is to find a common ground of alienation, and here is Mr. GLADSTONE'S strength.

A source of weakness to the Conservatives is, and has long been, their very rare tenure of office of late years. There are in England, as elsewhere, a large number of men of more or less influence and respectability, who are intent on their own interest and aggrandizement, and extremely reluctant to belong to a party from which they have no prospect of deriving personal advantage. Wealthy Baronets who want peerages are mortified to see Whigs of very inferior pretensions, so far as fortune and family go, passed over their heads; and loyal men of acknowledged position, see, with natural chagrin, those unquestionably inferior hoisted above them, as a reward for party services. When the Tories went out last time, the Irish Government committed some of the most outrageous jobs ever perpetrated, in one instance so flagrant as to draw down the censure of the Chief-Justice, himself a Tory. But little was said or done about the matter, and the excuses privately offered, "When shall we have a chance again?" were pretty generally accepted as an adequate apology.

It cannot be doubted that these considerations have affected many men, and although they might not pledge themselves to a thick and thin support of the present Government, yet they lean far more to its side than to the other, and contribute in no slight degree to its support. Were the Government presently to be defeated, and Mr. GLADSTONE "to go to the country," as the expression for dissolving Parliament is, there would, in all probability be a considerable accession to the Tory side of the House. The members of the present Government have proved themselves very indifferent administrators, especially as regards the navy, which is, and ever has been, the people's pet service; and again, the reaction for royalty, caused by the Prince's illness, would create a leaning in many minds toward a Tory Government; but still the Tories, though able, perhaps, in such a case to modify still more than at present the action of the Government, would not have influence enough in the House of Commons to make a lasting Government.

Frauds in Life Insurance.

We have more than once expressed our opinion that if the life insurance companies would prosecute criminally those who perpetrate a fraud upon them, they would be relieved of the apparent necessity of contesting so many losses. A case which has recently been tried in Bucks County, Pennsylvania, and which resulted in the conviction of one of the persons concerned in the fraud, shows that it only needs a little vigor on the part of the companies to secure successful results. OLIVER J. STIRK and OWEN GROOM were indicted for forgery and conspiracy to defraud the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company. In September, 1868, STIRK applied to the Company, through its agent, GROOM, for a policy of five thousand dollars on the life of Mrs. STIRK. The usual application was forwarded, and, as it showed an insurable life, the policy was issued and transmitted to GROOM, but Mrs. STIRK died before it was actually delivered to STIRK. STIRK first brought a civil action to recover the sum insured, but was beaten, and the Company, instead of being content with thus saving their money, caused the arrest and indictment of STIRK and GROOM. The latter forfeited his bail and ran away, but the former stood his trial. The Company then proved the following state of facts: STIRK, on the day he went to GROOM to apply for the policy, stated to a witness that he was going to get a policy, which he was anxious to do as his wife was sick. He frequently said he didn't think she would live long, and on one occasion asked a witness to sign a paper, saying he was getting an insurance on his wife's life, that it would be the means of his getting five thousand dollars, and when she told him she could not write, he wrote her name, and said if he got the paper he didn't care if his wife died the next day. This witness' name was signed to the application for the policy. It was shown by four physicians that at various times, from 1867 to February, 1869, they had attended Mrs. STIRK; that she was sick most of the time with a cough and the symptoms of unsound lungs; that as early as 1867 she complained of spitting blood; that from Sept. 25, 1868, to Jan. 26, 1869, she was constantly attended by a physician; she had a severe diarrhœa; one lung was nearly gone, and the other diseased; she finally died on Feb. 21, 1869, of inflammation of the bowels and peritonitis, to which she yielded the more readily from the condition of her system.

The physician whose name was affixed to the medical certificate sent with the application, swore that he never signed or wrote any part of it; that he believed it was in the handwriting of GROOM, the agent; that he had once examined Mrs. STIRK, or a woman represented to be her, and made out a certificate, which he gave to GROOM, but it was not the one sent to the Company. A similar application to the Berkshire Life Insurance Company was also proved. It was, moreover, shown that, just prior to the civil suit on the policy, STIRK offered the physician five hundred dollars if he would testify in his favor. Attempts of GROOM to persuade the Company to pay the policy, and declarations that he would have five thousand dollars from the Company, or two thousand five hundred dollars, for the policy were also shown. Mrs. STIRK'S signature to the application was shown not to be genuine. In defense, it was shown that a certificate admitted by the physician to be genuine, and that the genuineness of which he denied, were identical in language, and that, when examined for insurance for the Equitable Company, in December, 1867, Mrs. STIRK was in good health. Upon this evidence, the jury found STIRK guilty, and he was sentenced to six years and four months imprisonment.

We wish more of our Life Insurance Companies would follow the example thus set them by the Massachusetts Mutual. They owe it to themselves and their honest policyholders to promptly prosecute, criminally, every well-authenticated case of fraud. They ought not to rest content with escaping the payment of the immediate risk; but ought, by prosecution and punishment, to make it known that something more than a mere failure to obtain money will follow any fraud upon them. Such a course will, at first, cost them some trouble and some money, but they can invest none which will so surely earn them compound interest, in a ratio above all calculations known to actuaries, as money invested in this way.

Death on the Rail.

Within a week three railway accidents, involving great suffering and painful loss of life, have occurred in this State and in Pennsylvania, from the same cause, viz., broken rails. This is said to be a danger which in extremely cold weather is always imminent, and which no human care or foresight can avert. Perhaps in a majority of cases, extraordinary precautions might, at such times, greatly lessen the risk. But, admitting this class of accidents to be altogether unavoidable, they were aggravated in two of the cases referred to by an additional calamity, for which there appears to be no such excuse. Both the Lehigh Valley and the Philadelphia and Erie trains, which were alike thrown down embankments, were set on fire by the red-hot stoves in the cars. By this added misfortune at least one or two lives were lost that might have otherwise been saved.

Now it is astounding that in the face of repeated and dreadful warnings, railway companies should be permitted to persist in the present dangerous and criminal method of heating their cars. Either New-Hamburg, or Carr's Rock, it might have been thought, would have sufficed to enforce a reform. But no. The traveling public read of these horrors with a shudder, and then go on meekly offering themselves as possible holocausts to the spirit of corporate despotism. Rather than run so hideous a risk it would be far better that the cars should not be heated at all. Rugs and shawls would keep the traveler tolerably comfortable. Or, if not, a little discomfort might well be borne in consideration of the increased security against the most horrible of mischances.

But even this sacrifice is probably not at all necessary. A little care and extra expense would give us cars comfortably warmed and sufficiently secure against peril of fire. If we do not mistake, the Pullman cars in use on the Pacific Road give the desired model. In these the heating apparatus is inclosed in a compartment at one end of the car, which is or ought to be metal-lined and fire-proof, and from this steam pipes extend around the floor of the car, giving a pleasant and equable heat. Of course, even here there is the risk that in a collision the fire-proof compartment might be broken, or the steam-pipes burst, and the passengers thus be put at the mercy of their old enemy. But it is certain that the danger would be very much less than it is at present, and with iron cars it would certainly be reduced to the minimum. Perhaps in time some means may even be devised of heating a train by waste steam from the locomotive. In any event, ordinary prudence and humanity demand that the railway companies should adopt greater safeguards than are at present in use against this danger. And as they are unlikely to do anything of their own motion, they should be compelled to it by legislative action.

Politics on the Stage.

The refusal of the Lord Chamberlain, or of Mr. WILLIAM BODHAM DONNE, to permit allusions in dramas to political celebrities, continues to excite much talk in London. It is generally thought that the prohibition is absurd, and that there is no more reason why Mr. LOWE or Mr. GLADSTONE should be protected in this way than equally well-known persons not in political life. The truth is that wholesome satire may frequently be directed from the stage at the powers that be, and surely it seems an invidious discrimination to let the newspapers say practically what they will, and to muzzle the theatres. If it be said that mere comment, even adverse comment, is unobjectionable, but that it is not well for the rulers of the people to be turned into ridicule, we have only to refer to Punch. Its pictures of Lord JOHN RUSSELL, of Mr. DISRAELI and of Lord PALMERSTON are historical, and certainly it has never hesitated to laugh at either, when so minded, quite as freely as would be possible to a dramatist, and to quite as large an audience as could be put in a playhouse.

As we pointed out the other day, the absurdity of this prohibition derives fresh emphasis from the fact that in other European capitals—capitals, too, of countries not having representative or stable Governments—an opposite practice is freely allowed. "Le Roi Carotte," at Paris, burlesques everybody, right and left, from the Emperor downward. Of course NAPOLEON III. may be safely depicted as a "forked radish," or anything else just now; but M. THIERS comes in for a share in the fun, and so do MM. POUYER-QUERTIER and GAMBETTA. At Berlin they are running "An Hour With Prince Bismarck" with great acceptance, and as the Berlin correspondent who tells us of it, couples his announcement with the statement that the Aristophanic spirit has found its way to the Berlin theatre, we infer that the comedy named is not destitute of satiric humor. The same writer, in truth, explains how it is that politics on the stage are not the exception at Berlin, but almost the rule. BISMARCK himself being pachydermatous, the lesser magnates dare not be thin-skinned. "They do not mind being mentioned on the stage," he remarks "or even being personated by the actors. You sometimes see them sitting in the stalls and laughing at their own portraits." It is hard to see why SARDOU and SCHWARTZ should do in Paris and Berlin what Mr. BYRON or Mr. BUCKSTONE may not do in London. Surely the political leaders of England are not made of such delicate clay that they cannot stand being laughed at. Even the tyrants of Greece and Rome tolerated that upon occasion, and we imagine the usage of the Lord Chamberlain's office will not long withstand the adverse drift of public opinion.

MINOR TOPICS.

Mr. JAMES F. PIERCE informs us that the safe furnished him by Mr. JAMES MCB. DAVIDSON was bought in the regular way of business, and with the understanding that it should be paid for. Mr. PIERCE adds that he requested, when he bought the safe, that a bill should be sent to him for the same; that the bill not being sent he repeated his request on several occasions; and that a bill was at last sent to him, and that he means to pay it. We willingly give place to Mr. PIERCE'S explanation, and hope he will take care hereafter not to be caught in bad company.

The latest theory about the Tichborne case is of "spiritual" origin. It assumes that the pseudo Sir ROGER is in fact ARTHUR ORTON, the Wapping butcher—or rather that he was ORTON, but that he has been "psychologized" by the spirit of the real TICHBORNE, who went down in the Bella, and who objects to the disposition of the property that results from his death. Thus, being "possessed" by that person, ORTON is to all intents and purposes TICHBORNE, and yet, in point of material fact, he isn't. The witnesses who swear to his identity, are, of course, likewise all "psychologized," and are all perfectly sincere and entirely mistaken. It can hardly be possible that Sir J. D. COLERIDGE, the Attorney-General, can have been made acquainted with this plausible hypothesis when he made his opening speech the other day; had he been, he would hardly have stigmatized the claimant as "a conspirator, a perjurer, a forger, an impostor and a liar," epithets clearly inapplicable to a "psychologized" medium, however neatly they may be adapted to the enemies of the Tribune.

Mr. CHARLES READE is in hot water again. It seems that the "kleptomaniacs" are after him once more, and fierce is his wrath thereat. The chief offender this time is "George Eliot" in her new serial. As becomes a gentleman when dealing with a lady Mr. READE does not say the fair novelist "steals," or even that she "conveys" his ideas; he asserts, with sarcastic moderation, that she "borrows" them. This exposition is printed in Once a Week, and on a first and hasty examination Mr. READE'S case looks very strong. So many points of similarity are cited, that is to say, that it is hard to believe them altogether accidental. But on the other hand, the allegation is so intrinsically improbable that we could only assent to it on overwhelming evidence. "George Eliot," in the literary and creative sense, is far more fit to be a lender than a borrower, and it is almost inconceivable that a person of her strong brain should be guilty of the offense attributed to her.

A workman, who has been for many years in the employ of the Great Western Railway of Canada, has invented a signal system for locomotives, which, from its simplicity, promises to do effective service in preventing collisions. It contemplates a conversion of the white light, now carried on the head of the engine, to a red one, by means of a red oil-silk shade so disposed in the top of the lamp as to allow the engineer to unfold or roll it up instantly with the aid of a line. It is also intended that the number of each train shall be painted in large figures upon a rod and placed in front of the head-light, so that when locomotives are approaching each other the engineers may be able to tell at a glance if they are acting according to instructions from head-quarters. At the present time, most of the collisions occur through the inability of the engineers to distinguish whether approaching trains are on or off the main track. The new system requires that the red light shall be displayed whenever a doubt exists in the mind of an engineer. If such a light had been at the command of poor "Doc" SIMMONS, on the night of the terrible disaster at New-Hamburg, scores of families would have been spared the necessity of bewailing the untimely death of cherished ones.

The official organ of the Government at St. Petersburg repudiates with significant distinctness the construction put on the Czar's late speech, at the festival of St. George, by the German Press. That speech has been construed, says the Golos, in such a way as to put a pressure on the enemies of Germany, and especially upon France. But the Czar by no means intends that Russia shall be used as a tool by any foreign Power whatever. Russia is "not so narrow in her sympathies as not to be connected by equally friendly relations with France and other Powers, as with Germany." The article goes on to declare that if Russia has no interest to interfere in German affairs, she desires as little to act as a bugbear toward France; and ends with the pointed statement that Russia and Germany can only remain friends so long as the latter Power shall not give the Slavonians any ground for hostility. This demonstration from St. Petersburg is highly important, and seems to show that the clever Minister at Berlin has for once overshot his mark. He has apparently been given an inch and sought to take an ell, and the article of the Golos is probably inspired, not so much by the comments on the Czar's speech, as by the course of the unseen diplomacy that has followed it.

Jealousy of Paris has been manifested of late in the French provinces, in many strange ways. The last, and one of the most decided, has just been told us by the cable. It has been proposed that the gaming-tables, which are to be shut out of Germany at the end of the year, should have refuge offered them in Paris. The plan was to license gambling, and encourage its practice on a large scale, so as to attract visitors to that capital, and pay a heavy tax to the Government. We now hear that the people of the French watering-places have no idea of letting Paris monopolize this golden privilege without a struggle. "The Syndicates of AIX, Vichy, Plombières and Barèges have petitioned the Government for the abrogation of the law against public gambling, and offer forty million francs per annum for the privilege of licensing gambling establishments at those watering-places." So runs the telegraph, and thus it seems that unlucky Paris, deprived of her Court, and taxed to the extremest point of endurance, is threatened with the deprivation of the sole ray of prospective comfort her journalists have been able to devise for her. To be sure, the Government may profit all the same by the faro and roulette tables, whether their allurements are offered on the sea-shore or on the Seine, but this will not help the Parisian shopkeepers, or bring back plenty and gaiety to the deserted boulevards.

We publish today another article in the series descriptive of "Our State Institutions." The Pall Mall Gazette makes the following comments on the article published a few weeks ago, on the prison at Sing Sing:

"The gentleman commissioned by the NEW-YORK TIMES to visit and report upon the 'State Institutions' literally spares no pains in the accomplishment of his duty. The last institution visited is the prison of Sing Sing, and in the course of his inspection the reporter arrived at the punishment-room. He discovered that there are five modes of punishment in vogue at Sing Sing—the 'dark cell,' the 'ball and chain,' the 'collar and crown,' the 'back handcuff,' and the 'thumb pulley.' The latter being recommended by the jailer as the worst form of punishment, the enterprising reporter determined to have its effect tried upon himself, in order that he might better be able to describe prison life in Sing Sing. At his request the obliging attendant produced about a foot of stout whip-cord, with a slip-knot at either end, and putting the reporter's thumbs in the loops, drew the knot taut below the first joint. The cord was then hung on a hook attached to the end of a rope which dangled from a pulley in the ceiling, and the simple preparations were complete. The signal was given, and a strong-armed convict seized the rope and hoisted the enterprising reporter up by the thumbs till his toes barely touched the ground. After thus hanging five seconds, the whole weight of his body dragging on his thumbs, he 'requested to be let down.' 'It seems to me,' he says, noting down his experiences, 'that my thumbs and the tough sinews on the inside of the wrist were being drawn out. I felt that my arms must leave the shoulder sockets.' The reporter is enabled subsequently to write strongly in favor of the abolition of 'this hellish torture.' It is, nevertheless, rather a favorite mode of correction with the authorities at Sing Sing, for in the last official report of the inspectors of State Prisons the following item appears under the heading 'Exhibit of punishments during the year'—'Pulled, 208.' This gives an average of precisely four prisoners 'pulled' every week throughout the year at the chief prison of the State of New-York."

A CALL FOR REFORM.

The Citizens' Anti-Monopoly Association—The Gas and Railroad Questions Discussed—The Halls Demanded for the People.

A meeting was held at Masonic Hall last night to organize opposition against the gas companies, and to agitate other reforms to benefit the condition of the working classes. The meeting was enthusiastic, and its temper seemed to be unanimous for reform and the overthrow of all Rings. THEODORE E. TOMLINSON was chosen Chairman, and E. M. HUSSEY Secretary. A permanent organization was effected, with the name of the "Citizens' Anti-Monopoly Association," the object of which shall be to compel the Legislature to reform the gas service as at present administered, to run the City railroads for the convenience of the public, and to throw open the public buildings at night for peaceable assemblages of citizens to discuss public questions, in order that the science of government may be better understood by the working classes, and their intellectual condition improved. Mr. TOMLINSON made a forcible speech, in which he explained the questions at issue and urged united action for reform. He was followed by E. M. HUSSEY, Col. BERRY, P. DAVIS, THEODORE BANKS, Grand Master of the Lodge of Painters, and others. The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, A resolution introduced in the Board of Aldermen of the City of New-York, requesting the Legislature of the State of New-York to repeal an act authorizing certain parties to manufacture and sell gas to be used for the purpose of lighting all that portion of the City north of the centre line of Seventy-ninth-street, including all Central Park, and whereas the repeal of said act will require the adjustment of all legal and equitable claims for expenses incurred by the company formed under said act; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty are requested to memorialize the Legislature to enact such laws as they, in their wisdom, may deem expedient to enable the City to supply its citizens with gas at cost.

Resolved, That we respectfully request and instruct our Senators and members of Assembly to introduce in the Legislature an act that will enable this City, under such regulations as the honorable Legislature may deem proper, to supply its citizens with gas.

A petition to the Legislature embodying the objects of the meeting was circulated in the Hall and numerously signed.

The Tammany Republicans—Abrogation of the Office of Mayor Asked For.

A special meeting of the Tammany Republican Executive Committee was held last evening. The following resolution, proposed by Col. WILLIS at the general meeting Wednesday evening, and referred to the Executive Committee, was adopted:

Whereas, We, the General Committee, representing the Republican Party of the City of New-York, still insisting on the prosecution of measures originally instituted by us to rescue our Municipal Government from the grasp of an unscrupulous oligarchy, which culminated in a grand triumph of honesty in the last election, in the selection of a Reform Board of Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen, and the overthrow of TWEED, CONNOLLY and SWEENY; and,

Whereas, Their associate in wrong-doing, A. OAKEY HALL, still retains, to the shame of our people, the honorable position of Mayor;

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Republican Party that measures should be forthwith instituted to secure the impeachment of the Mayor, and to that end the Common Council be requested to take necessary action in the premises.

Also the following:

Resolved, That the Legislature be requested forthwith to abrogate the office of Mayor until otherwise provided by law, and devolve the duties of the office on some City authority thereto constitutionally competent; and, further,

Resolved, That a copy of the preamble and resolution be sent to the members of the Common Council and the members of the Legislature.

Judge Bedford's Jury.

The Grand Jury was in session yesterday, and examined a number of important witnesses. Among them was Mr. AUGUST BELMONT. Ex-Judge FULLERTON, CHAS. O'CONOR, and Gen. BARLOW visited District-Attorney GARVIN in the morning. It was rumored that THOS. C. FIELDS, HARRY GENET and J. MCB. DAVIDSON would be indicted among a number of others. It is probable that the Grand Jury will ask for a further extension of time today.

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

Rumors of a Lady Murderer—Effect of German Firmness—Gossip of the Day—Press Prosecutions—The Trial of Ex-Consul Place.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Jan. 19, 1872.

Another German soldier has been murdered at Lunéville, and the assassin has been arrested. The man CREMEL, who committed the deed, fled beyond the military jurisdiction, and was heard of on the road leading to Switzerland. A telegram to this effect was at once sent to Versailles, saying that his extradition would be demanded under a certain clause of the treaty, and sufficient information was furnished to guide the French Police in tracking the man, and in identifying him as the assassin. I do not know that a word can be put in italics when sent by telegraph, but no one who has read Prince BISMARCK'S dispatch to Count ARNIM, and the debates in the German Parliament, can fail to lay a marked emphasis upon this word "demanded," or to understand the deep significance of it. One can imagine the quiet, solemn, determined and half menacing manner in which it was pronounced when the dispatch was dictated. At Versailles there was no kind of mistake about it, no hesitation, no searching for a quibble, or a loophole for delay. In less than an hour the Prefects of all the Eastern Departments had read the description of the assassin; "boot and saddle" was the word along the border; gendarmes rode out in hot haste, and all of the servants of the Government betrayed a zeal which could scarcely have been expected in such a cause. It was not long ere CREMEL fell into the hands of the patrol. There were no objections raised, or technical difficulties of any kind, and the German military commander was speedily notified that, so soon as regularly identified, the man arrested as CREMEL, the assassin, would be subject to extradition. I do not know the sequel, but presume that thanks were sent for this prompt action on the part of the French authorities, with the notification that the proper legal steps would be taken, and a guard sent to receive the prisoner. All this shows the effect of that severe dispatch, and goes a long way toward an excuse for its seeming brutality. The Paris journals make no comments upon the affair, either one way or the other, and are content to give the usual telegrams of the "Agence Havas" without remark. I should not like to affirm that the feeling would last very long time, but for the moment it is evident that both the Government and the journalists are convinced that the Germans must protect their troops, and that the army of occupation still has the power to punish promptly and severely.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

The news of today does not take a very wide range, but what there is of it may be called interesting and important. The discussion of the Budget and of the tax upon raw materials is still going on, and growing more and more heated and embittered. At Versailles the trial of the assassins of La Roquette drags along slowly, but not unprofitably. A case of less importance, perhaps, but one of interest to Americans, is now before one of the Tribunals of the Seine; two more journals have been suppressed upon the highway; "Le Roi Carotte" is holding brilliant court at the Gaîté, and the city is full of mud, curious rumors, and the Emperor of Brazil. "In the times which run"—to be more literal than liberal in the use of the common French expression—it is not easy to say which of these topics has the preference, for they are indiscriminately mixed in our daily gossip, and treated, as I must treat them here, in the currente calamo fashion, and with the momentary anticipation that some startling bit of news, like a tile from a roof, may fall down upon our heads. The peculiar amount of interest attached to each item must, of course, depend very much upon the person who reads it, and to his habits, tastes, and calling. Journalists will be vexed to learn that the Gaulois and the Constitution have fallen under the ban, and that the sale of those journals has been forbidden upon the streets; politicians and political economists will attach great importance to the debate upon the Budget, and to the singular declaration of M. THIERS that "all foreign nations had discarded the unjust tax upon incomes, and adopted the tax upon raw material." The assertion is general and vague, and I have no idea what foreign nations have done so, or of the authority upon which it was based.

THE CASE OF "LA CONSTITUTION."

About the Constitution I have only a few words to say. It is Radical Republican, and was formerly, as I have already informed you, the Vérité. I have had occasion to write of it several times. Some of my readers may recall my letters of more than a year ago giving an account of the quarrel between M. EUNEAR PICARD, of the Electeur Libre, and the capitalist of the concern. M. EDOUARD PORTALIS married a California girl with a handsome dot. He is of an old and aristocratic noble family, but a rabid Red Republican. At first M. PICARD had need of M. PORTALIS' money, but after becoming Secretary of Finance, it is to be presumed that he had money enough of his own to run a newspaper, for he quarreled with M. PORTALIS, who started the Vérité. It was one of the two or three journals allowed to exist during the Commune, why—can be easily inferred. It was suppressed after the "days of June," but in its place appeared the Constitution. It was the same journal with a new heading, how obtained I have already told you. This paper sustained VICTOR HUGO in the last election, and has been very severe upon M. THIERS, accusing him daily of a desire to betray the Republic. It takes the ground that the President is merely an Orleanist in disguise—hardly in disguise—and working in the interests of the ORLEANS family. The idea of this decree is to injure these journals financially, and to stop their increasing influence and circulation. It has long been claimed that the only contest now possible is between the Radicals and the Bonapartists, and if newspaper circulation is any test, there must be some truth in this idea, for it is clearly shown that the Gaulois, L'Ordre and Constitutionnel are rapidly gaining, as well as the Radical journals, while the Monarchist journals are dropping behind as rapidly.

THE TRIAL OF EX-CONSUL PLACE.

Of the trial at Versailles for the massacre of the hostages, I have little to say, for the matter cannot be given in a word, and I prefer to await the end. And so with the second trial of which I spoke, and which is nearly concluded. As I have already given a portion of the affair of Consul-General PLACE, and shown how weak was his defense outside the system adopted by him

ANOTHER CHAPTER ON SAFES.

Some More Claims upon City Bounty Burglar-Proof Safes for Ring Savings Banks---Transactions that Require Explanation---A Safe for New-Orleans---How Tammany Politicians Curtailed Their Expenditures.

We present today another batch of the safes supplied to private persons, which figure in McBRIDE DAVIDSON'S bills against the City. The omnivorous TWEED comes in, as usual, for the lion's share—no less than $8,640 worth of safes (in addition to $8,775 worth sent to the TWEED family in 1870-71) having been furnished to him during the period covered by the subjoined statement.

It will be observed that the City is debited with two safes ($4,000) and one letter-press ($30) supplied to the Bowling-green Savings Bank. As will be noted from a statement in another column, these safes were reckoned by HANK SMITH among the assets of the bank, while, two days ago, McBRIDE DAVIDSON is reported to have sent in a bill to the bank for this identical $4,000 worth of goods furnished in 1868 and 1869. The curious question, therefore, comes whether these safes belong to the City, which seems to have paid for them, to the bank depositors, among whose assets they are, or to McBRIDE DAVIDSON, who claims, apparently, not to have got his money either from the bank or the City, albeit he sent bills to both.

The Guardian and Yorkville Savings Banks seem to have been fortunate enough to secure safes without paying for them. What equivalent these institutions gave for this exhibition of Ring bounty might, perhaps, be discovered by an inspection of their list of call loans.

As in the list published on Thursday, there are probably names in the following statement to whom DAVIDSON'S books do unmerited injury. As before, we shall, of course, give due publicity to any exculpatory statements which these parties may send us.

DUTCH HEINRICH CAUGHT.

The Notorious Marauder Accused of the Cedar-street Robbery—Strange Conduct of the Detectives.

That notorious operator, CHARLES NEWMAN, but better known as Dutch Heinrich, was arrested Thursday night by Sergt. QUINN, of the First District Police-court Squad, and arraigned yesterday, before Justice HOGAN, at the Tombs, on a charge of being concerned in a great bond robbery, which occurred in the office of J. S KENNEDY & Co., No. 41 Cedar-street, on the 15th of January. On that day it is alleged that HEINRICH and a confederate entered the office named, and the latter engaged Mr. HENRY M. BAKER, one of the firm, in conversation relative to the purchase of some bonds which he desired to make. While this was going on HEINRICH walked carelessly about the office, and occasionally was near a tin box containing securities of the value of $33,000. Mr. BAKER paid sufficient attention to observe, in fact, all that the thief, who was a stranger to him, to notice that he had a covering of oil-silk over one of his fingers, which he was continually rubbing. After having been in the office about fifteen minutes, both men left, without, of course, making any purchases, and immediately afterward it was found that the tin box had departed with them. This box contained a promissory note, made by A. F. SMITH to the order of the firm, for $14,916 45, with thirty-three bonds of the Appleton and New-London Railroad Company, Nos. 365 to 397, inclusive, each being for $1,000, and being collateral for the payment of the note. In the place of the box was the oil-silk covering which had been on the finger of the accommodating friend of the customer. Private detectives were immediately informed of the robbery, and being given a description of the two men, it was decided that the one who had evidently picked up the box was the infamous HEINRICH. After due deliberation over this discovery, a complaint was made before Justice HOGAN, a warrant was issued, and HEINRICH was arrested as stated. When arraigned he denied all knowledge of the affair, but being identified as the man who had walked about the office, he was committed for trial. HEINRICH was pointed out to a private detective named MALOY, two days after the robbery, as the man who had committedds, but nothing was done to effect his arrest.

That this adroit and most successful thief has so long been suffered to perambulate Wall and Broad streets, and prey upon the business community there with impunity, is a lasting disgrace to our Police—not because of their inability to arrest him, it is said, for who does not know the features of this foremost of sneak-thieves, who flaunts the result of his criminal depredations in the shape of fashionable and faultless attire, and sparkling diamonds, before honest citizens?—but because, it is alleged, from every dollar stolen by him and his desperate gang the Police Detective Ring at Police Headquarters receive their share.

In order that District-Attorney GARVIN may not have an excuse for not hastening HEINRICH for trial, it will not be amiss to acquaint him with a few facts from the pages of HEINRICH'S history, culled rather hastily, but nevertheless accurately. Perhaps after this there will be no excuse for Mr. GARVIN to allow Dutch HEINRICH to slip through on the only defense his confederates in crime can now invent for him—Sam Weller's alibi.

Under the name of Henry Newman, at the outbreak of the war, he was first arrested in this country for robbing a man of a gold watch in a street-car in this City. His purse being rather depleted, and his friends at that time not embracing many able (?) detectives, he was sent to the State Prison for five years. After finishing his term he again plied his avocation of picking pockets very successfully until he became known to Mr. DAVID, and meeting with CHAUNCEY JOHNSON, the most celebrated sneak thief at that time in the United States, the two soon formed a coalition, which was the terror of the business men throughout the country. At one time during the year 1866, more bold than discreet, HEINRICH entered a bank in Wall-street, and going boldly behind the desk in the presence of all the clerks, lifted two bags containing $10,000 in gold and coolly walked out with the money, and passed it to his confederates. The act was accomplished in so short a space of time that before the bank officials could recover their surprise at the thief's astounding impudence, the money was gone; but HEINRICH was chased, and after a desperate struggle was captured. Instead of being sent to State Prison, he should have been the result, the matter was compromised by the thieves returning half the money stolen, and so HEINRICH made his escape, the President of the bank from which the robbery took place becoming his bondsman.

Not long after this he stole from an old banker named PROUTY $61,000 in bonds at the corner of Broadway and Vesey-street, but the old man followed him up, caught him, and gave him in charge of one of the Police officers connected with the Broadway squad. Here the cunning which was always displayed by him in conveying the proceeds of his thefts to one of his confederates again came to his aid. The old banker had his stolen property restored to him, and HEINRICH was set again adrift to pilfer to his heart's content. At another time, when arrested for a daring daylight robbery in Exchange-place, he escapes in the Court of General Sessions with a light plea, and is sent to the Penitentiary for SIX months, instead of to the State Prison for six years, as he richly deserved.

MARKET REFORM.

Important Movement of the Occupants of Stalls.

A Change for the Better in the Public Markets—Action of a Committee from the Various Markets—Indorsing Mr. Green and Mr. Devoe.

Under the nefarious Ring management, to hold a stall in any of the principal public markets, was something attended with no small risk. You might have occupied the stall for an unlimited period, never have infringed a single ordinance, have always paid your rent regularly in advance, yet at a moment's notice you were liable to be turned out into the street, and see your premises given to another, whose only merit was that his political leanings were in accordance with those of the Ring. Was your building tumbling down about your ears, or had your business so increased as to require some improvement, even when you did it at your own expense, you were forced to pay a certain sum—a perfectly unlawful charge—for the privilege. Suppose you wished to give up your lease to another; without a semblance of right, before you could obtain a new permit, you were mulcted in a round sum, which varied with your means, but which invariably found its way into the pockets of those precious rascals who ruled the market. As to the condition of the market; take that of Washington Market as an example, it was filthy to a degree. It is true a certain charge was made, and paid to some one for keeping it clean, but no broom was ever seen to sweep it, and knee deep in mire, the visitor and the tenants waded through heaps of decomposing animal and vegetable matter.

How it was possible that such a large, important and influential body of men as are represented by our New-York butchers, could have put up with this wretched condition of things, is hard to tell. Redress was impossible. The most culpable fraud was an every-day occurrence, and yet they were forced to suffer. We may ask, how came it that all the citizens of New-York bore, with the meekness of beasts of burden, the heavy loads imposed on their backs? As was intimated in a former article, a change was to be made in the markets. The task was no easy one. Abuses of the worst character had so much grown into the system, that it has taken much time to remedy these evils. Marketmen had been imposed on so long, that they were unwilling to believe that any remedy was at hand. One by one, however, whenever proofs of venality were shown, the thieves in the former management were dropped, and this weeding out has been continued until the process is complete. Men doing business in the market breathe now the more freely with the assurance that their rights will be respected. A permit can now be had at almost any time, not after months of delay, as was formerly the case, and when obtained the clerical fee is but a trifle.

An inspection of Washington Market yesterday, showed that it was clean—cleaner than we have seen it for years, and real live scavengers were at work, and not the myths of former days.

Controller GREEN has evinced an earnest desire to meet any reasonable views coming from the market people, and to place only honest and competent officers in its management. At least in this matter, we are pleased to say, that reform has been of real benefit, and that the era of barefaced robbery and rascality is over.

We record, then, with pleasure, the action of a depution from all the principal markets, who called on Mr. GREEN yesterday afternoon, and expressed to him their satisfaction at the reform already accomplished and the confidence they felt in the appointment of Mr. DE VOE, the new Superintendent. The Committee was composed of the following gentlemen: J. V. Thurston, West Washington Market; Jas. Stewart, Washington Market; W. H. Hanabe, Clinton Market; Robert Gow, Catherine Market; David B. Reed, Jefferson Market; Thos. H. Brown, Essex Market; J. N. Valentine, Fulton Market; John Donovan, Tompkins Market; J. N. Seaman, Centre Market, and Mayer Meyer, of Union Market.

Mr. STEWART, of Washington Market, in behalf of the delegates from all the markets, presenting ten memorials to the Controller, stated as follows: That the gentlemen he represented wished to express the great satisfaction the market men had felt at the announcement that Mr. GREEN had been appointed Controller. That knowing the grievous wrongs they had suffered, and the uncertainty which had always threatened there in regard to the occupancy of their stands, now that Mr. GREEN had the position of Controller, and had the power of making the appointments, they had said to themselves, "At last, thank God, we are in honest hands." That the men doing business in the markets presented a very large interest, and had in their employ a great number of people, and that they were all ready to maintain and aid the Controller in the difficult work of reform, and that he might confidently rely on their hearty support. Mr. STEWART went on to say that the appointment of Col. DEVOE had been received by them with the greatest satisfaction, and that they considered it as an assurance of what the Controller was determined to accomplish, and they begged that if Mr. GREEN or the Superintendent of Markets needed any further support that they would freely give it, in order that the market, in the appointment of all its officers, should be in keeping with honest reform.

Mr. GREEN replied as follows: "Gentlemen: I can gather from your remarks the general tenor of the resolutions you have been pleased to present to me, and I am most gratified at this evidence of your co-operation in the reforms so much needed in the markets of this great City. You know better than I do how much the market interests became involved from political causes. One determination I formed immediately upon coming into office was that, regardless of influences which might be brought to bear upon the subject of the Superintendents of Markets, he should be one familiar with the condition of those interested in the markets, and one who with integrity, promptness and impartiality, would institute the necessary investigations, and would instantly correct those flagrant abuses which have so much impaired the interests of those connected with the markets. I must, therefore, express to you the satisfaction I feel when you inform me that the efforts I have made meet your approval, for none can be as intimately acquainted with the whole subject as yourselves. The reforms needed, however, can only be permanently accomplished by your earnest and united efforts. All of you have personal interests involved in the markets. Alone I can do but very little. Your persevering support is absolutely essential to attain success in the reformation commenced. You must not only stand with me, but before me while I am here. I repeat, it will be most encouraging to know that I have your approval, and that I may depend on your widespread and powerful support. I desire to obtain most earnestly your good opinion and its continuation. I am proud to feel that your aid will be vouchsafed me, and believe it will be of a permanent character. With these assurances on your part, I am ready to proceed with this duty of reforming the market abuses, notwithstanding the political obstructions which may be thrown in my way. I shall strive to do my duty, regardless of the consequences, and in the appointments I may make, will try to consult the wishes of those transacting business in the markets.

The growth of the City is far in advance of the markets. Proper accommodation is much wanted. For such improvements as may be necessary, your joint action and advice will be necessary, and some later day such plans may be presented to you, which will require certain legislative enactments in order to render them possible.

Again tendering you my sincerest thanks, and expressing my desire to co-operate with you, in order to establish and maintain a better order of things in reference to markets of New-York, I shall always remember this interview, and these mementoes (referring to the memorials presented indorsing the appointment of Mr. DEVOE) as evidence of the approval of those most capable of forming a correct judgment in the premises.

From among the numerous memorials, having over 600 signatures to them, we copy the one presented by Washington Market.

NEW-YORK, Jan. 23, 1872.

Hon. A. H. Green: SIR—Since the appointment of Mr. DEVOE as Superintendents of Markets, we, the undersigned, stand-owners of West Washington Market, have felt confident that a thorough reformation of market affairs would be sure to follow. You have put the "right man in the right place," and we sincerely hope that he may be clothed with due authority in order that he may be able to effect such reform as his long experience and good judgment may suggest. To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue Jan. 29 there appeared an editorial article which illustrates very forcibly the danger of making positive statements without knowledge of the facts in the case. Ordinarily it is undoubtedly the best policy for any company or individual to pass by attacks of this nature in silence, but the article in question contains very grave and serious charges against this Company, and, appearing in an influential journal, would, if uncontradicted, be productive of much error and injustice.

You say that liberal supplies of air were forced through the meters day and night, and that our consumers were made to pay for it. In regard to this statement, we say most emphatically that it is untrue. The facts are these: On Saturday evening, the 23d of December, immediately after the explosion at our works, we closed the valve for sending gas into the City from Forty-second-street. The gas in the two holders at the Sixty-fifth-street station continued to supply the largest part of the district until 12 o'clock. On Sunday, the 24th, we furnished no gas. On Christmas (Monday) gas was supplied from 7 P.M. to 10 P. M. On Tuesday night there was no gas sent out. On Wednesday gas was sent out at 7 P. M. On Thursday at 5 P. M., and on Friday, we were again giving our consumers their full supply. We had advised our consumers, by notice in the daily papers, of the hours during which the gas would be supplied while the interruption at our works continued.

On the night of the accident many of the street-lamps went out. They were closed as quickly as possible, but some air probably did get into the pipes before the lamps could be closed; the amount must have been very small, for the lamps were open but a very short time. The air thus getting into the pipes may be that to which you refer as being forced through the meters day and night. The article may be capable of this "interpretation," but to the ordinary reader it would certainly convey the idea that we had deliberately forced air into our pipes with the fraudulent purpose and intent to make up our losses in this way from our consumers, suggestive that the meters could be made to register day and night, unless the consumer was using or attempting to use gas the whole time, and this is not the case in any dwelling-house. It is one which does not strike us as calculated to deceive even the ordinary mind.

Again, as to the December gas bills. The indexes from which these bills were made out were taken from the 20th to the 30th of December. Those taken on the 23d, inclusive, could not have been affected by the explosion, and those taken from the 26th to the end of the month, the 24th being Sunday, and the 26th Christmas Day, could have been but slightly if at all affected, for it will be remembered that on Sunday we furnished no gas, and therefore the pipes in the houses could not have been open, and on the 25th they could only have been open from 7 P. M. to 11 P. M. The truth is, that in December and January more gas is always consumed than in the other months, and the bills are consequently larger. The bills rendered by this Company are made out strictly for the amount of gas consumed as indicated by the meters. We do not "strike a rough sort of average," as your article suggests. We use the best meters as yet invented, and know of no way to find out the quantity of gas consumed except from the meters. If consumers think that their meters do not register correctly, we test the meter without expense to the consumers. If they are dissatisfied with our test, we refer them to the State Inspector, JOHN BYRNES, No. 431 Grand-street. If, upon his test, the meter be found incorrect, we pay all expenses, and make an allowance, as certified by him. We may add that the explosion at our works was not caused by an attempt to adulterate our gas. We are now and have always used the very best materials in the manufacture of our gas, and we deliver a gas of the highest candle power required or in use. We have no desire to take up the gage of battle in favor of gas companies in general, but it would at least have been fair if the writer of your article, in referring to the Judge who looked up his house, went to Europe, and found large gas bills awaiting him on his return, had told the whole story. The case referred to did not arise in our district. Complaint was made, as we understand, to the Company supplying the house in question. An investigation was made, and it was found that the servants of the Judge in question had been consuming gas in his absence. This, you will perceive, gives a new aspect to the story, and while it may destroy a nice point in your sagacicle, the cause of truth may be subserved by the whole story being known. We dislike to trespass so far upon your columns, but in view of the grave charges brought against us in the article referred to, we think we may justly ask to speak to the public through the same source.

Yours,
O. ZOLLIKOFFER,
President Metropolitan Gas-light Company.

A Parallel.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Congress authorized five per cent. bonds to be issued, with the avails of which the outstanding six per cent. bonds were to be redeemed, but at the same time provided that the public debt should not be increased. It was, however, necessary to sell the new bonds in order to obtain the money with which the old ones were to be redeemed.

Do not the objections of certain cities to the manner in which this law was executed remind you of the action of the Western County Board which resolved:

1. That we build a new jail.
2. That we will use the materials of the old one.
3. That the old jail be used until the new one is built. PHARISEE.

THE UNION LEAGUE CLUB, NEW-YORK, Friday, Feb. 2, 1872.

Col. McClure on the President.

There seems to be an attempt to misrepresent the position of Col. MCCLURE, the "Republican Reform" candidate for the Senate of Pennsylvania at the recent special election in the Fourth District of that State. In his closing speech of the campaign at Philadelphia, on the eve of the election, he said:

"My views on all political subjects were well understood from the first day I entered the battle. I declared that a Senator could not disregard the wishes of his people on any question affecting their preferences or candidates without dishonor, and I could not fail to recognize the prevailing sentiment in the Fourth District in favor of the renomination of President GRANT, and recognizing it, I would faithfully obey it. If I could not do so, I could not have accepted the standard in this contest."

Amusements—Matinee at the Academy.

Mr. Erben's New Organ.

Mr. HENRY ERBEN has just finished and delivered to the First Dutch Church, at Albany, a magnificent organ, costing, with the case, about $15,000. The tone is rich and warm, and the action remarkably easy. The instrument is 46 feet high, 35 feet wide and 22 feet deep. Some of the solo stops are of exceptional beauty, an Aeolina of 16 feet, a Flute Harmonique, and a Gemshorn being conspicuously fine. There are three manuals and a pedale, arranged on the following scheme: Great Organ—Double Open Diapason, Open Diapason, Gamba, Melodia, Stopped Diapason, Principal, Wald Flute, Twelfth, Fifteenth, Sesquialtera, Mixture, Trumpet, Clarion—13 registers. Swell Organ—Bourdon, Open Diapason, Viol di Gamba, Stopped Diapason, Octave, Flute Harmonique, Piccolo, Cornet, Cornopean, Hautboy, Vox Humana, Tremolo—13 registers. Choir Organ—Æolians, Gemshorn, Principal, Wald Flute, Quintaflophon, Stopped Diapason, Violana, Flauto Transverso, Flageolet, Clarionet, Bassoon—11 registers. Pedale—Double Open Diapason, Bourdon, Double Gamba, Violoncello, Quint, Clarabel Flute, Trombone, Trumpet—8 registers. Total, 44 registers, all running through. Seven of them are of 16 feet. The whole number of pipes is 3,000. There are also eight mechanical stops, and eight combination pedals.

Mr. BRENTANO (No. 33 Union-square) has received early and full supplies of all the chief foreign periodicals. The Graphic reprints four of Mr. NAST'S well-known cartoons, with an article strongly laudatory of the artist. There is also a very curious account of the revival of monastic life in England, with numerous illustrations. The Illustrated London News has managed to get a portrait of the new hippopotamus, and the number abounds with fine illustrations. Punch, Nature, the Academy, and the Saturday Review are also to be had at Mr. BRENTANO'S.

THE CUSTOM-HOUSE.

The Testimony Before the Investigating Committee Yesterday—Evidence of Edward Johnson and James H. Young.

The Committee of the Senate on Retrenchment met yesterday morning at the Fifth-avenue Hotel, Senator BUCKINGHAM presiding.

EDWARD JOHNSON, a warehouseman, in reply to the Chairman, testified that he had charge of the General Order business under Mr. BARNEY, and knew its value. He offered Col. LEET $60,000 for the privilege. Formerly the Chamber of Commerce regulated the prices; but the Collector permitted an increase of fifty per cent. on the General Order stores.

To Senator Bayard—I never heard of so much pilfering as since LEET & STOCKING got charge of the business. All the question of charge is under the supervision of the Collector, but if he were the smartest man in the world he could not do all that is expected of him. The employes of the Custom-house are assessed for political purposes, and are appointed, not for their fitness for the office, but on account of their usefulness in carrying political primaries. For the most part, they are ignorant, uneducated men, who would not be kept in the store or counting-house of any merchant in the City. These men have told me they were discharged for failure to perform partisan political service. The Collector runs the political machine, but has little to do with the actual management of the business. His communications with the Secretary of the Treasury are conducted on information received from his subordinates. The charges of the General Order are high enough for war times, but are far too great in the present condition of things. In regard to the irregularities referred to, I have no information except from hearsay. I have frequently heard inspectors say they got a "hatchet," which means a gratuity from the merchants. I have no doubt some of the inspectors take "hatchets" from both sides, from the merchant to keep the goods out of the General Order, and from the latter to hurry the goods in. I complained to Mr. MURPHY that these irregularities were injuring the party, but he said it was altogether beyond his control. In my opinion the Collector should attend less to political matters, and more to the General-Order business.

To Senator Pratt—I meet numbers of importers every day who complain of the charges of the General Order business. I would do the business for fifteen cents storage, fifteen cents labor, and let the merchants do the cartage themselves. I did not charge as low as that when I had the General Order business, because the prices of everything were then higher. During Mr. JOHNSON'S Administration, I knew instances where a deputy collector was in the habit of "borrowing" money from the General Order men to stifle the complaints of the merchants, but as he was my personal enemy, and is now out of office, I prefer not to give his name. I know men are appointed to the Custom-house for their ability to cheat at primaries, because I saw it myself. This occurred under Republican and Democratic administration alike, even under ANDREW JACKSON'S Administration. It is an understood thing in all Administrations that the employes are taxed for political purposes. I decline to give the names of the ignorant men in the Custom-house, because I believe it is the duty of the Collector to ascertain and remedy it. I consider the salaries too low, and the system of changing men every year an abuse. I am a Republican since 1852, and desire all abuses corrected.

JAMES H. YOUNG, an Inspector of Customs since 1862, in reply to Senator CASSERLY, said he did not consider the present condition of the General Order system favorable to the public interest. As soon as the steamer arrives she commences discharging, and here commences the evil of the General Order system. Seven-eighths of the goods imported to New-York would pay duty at once if the merchants got proper facilities for taking out their permits by enforcing the closing of the hatches forty-eight hours after the steamer's arrival. It would be a great convenience to merchants to take their goods from the steamer direct instead of the stores. This can be done by the steam lines without collusion with the discharging inspector. In order to make out a case against the steam-ship line you must come to the Custom-house with your head battered. I did it once, but don't propose to do so again. I have got into some serious trouble with the steam-ship lines while prosecuting the duties of my office, and I understood I would be removed, even if it were necessary to assassinate me. About the monthly oath administered to inspectors, I think it is only a Custom-house oath, and has not the same solemnity of my oath bow before this Committee. While on the Cunard dock I heard JAMES DAVIS, a Custom-house broker, use very coarse language to an inspector. The inspectors stand in awe of him in influence, for it is understood any baggage he wishes to have passed must be passed, or the inspector will lose his head. Not long since he came up to the barge office in the Health boat with a number of ladies who had jewelry that might be worth $50,000. I did not report this to my superior officer, because I am tired of fighting these things. If the Surveyor heard of it he would do his duty; but if it got before one of the old barnacles twenty or thirty years in the Custom-house, it would be covered up. There has been a great deal said in the course of this investigation in regard to paying inspectors gratuities. I have never been approached in that manner, but I have no doubt that it is done in some cases. Smuggling by the Havana steamers is a matter of daily occurrence, and secret places are found on the ships to hide goods in. Smuggling is also made possible by the want of caution of night inspectors, who frequently sleep. Of the seizures made, I should say that ninety per cent. are settled contrary to law. If one prominent man was sent to State Prison for this offense it would do more to stop it than anything else. The system of giving moieties to informers I consider the greatest curse to the Government, because it induces the inspectors to allow such things in the expectation of a seizure. The National line of steamships gives us more trouble than any other. The goods are not discharged according to the Government regulations. The proprietors of that line were owners of the three-pipe blockade runners so successful during the war. I tried once but would not undertake to go again to enforce the law on that dock, unless a revenue cutter was put alongside and troops on board to back me. The General Order store should be stopped by the Collector, and if I held that position I would do so. There would be no complaints of overcharge by merchants then.

To Senator HOWE—LEET & STOCKING appeared to be more willing to receive goods of all descriptions than the proprietors of any other General-Order stores. The general impression in the department seems to be that, with the exception of the Surveyor, inspectors have no rights their superior officers are bound to respect.

The witness here told of an incident which occurred on a Cunard steamer. A corpse was brought over in a case, and the hearse was on the dock to receive it. But in placing it in the vehicle the bearers shook it and a rinsing noise was heard. The case was opened and found to be full of French clocks.

Senator BAYARD remarked, "That was a corpse for time, and not for eternity."

Arrested for Transmitting Obscene Literature Through the Post-Office.

PATRICK J. BANNON, of Nos. 14 and 16 ADD-street, is charged on affidavit of JAMES GAYLOR, Special Post-office Agent, with sending an obscene book and pamphlet through the Post-office, and also a number of pictures and prints of the same vile character. BANNON, it appears, is an extensive dealer in this pestiferous stuff, and carries on his business in connection with a man who calls himself Daly, but whose real name is ELMORE. ELMORE was arrested at the "office," but claims that he has no connection with the business further than acting as clerk. BANNON was not captured till later in the day. They were brought before Commissioner OSBORN, yesterday, who retained ELMORE as a witness against BANNON, and committed the latter to Ludlow-street Jail in default of $5,000 bail.

Committed for Smuggling.

CHARLES MARXEN and U. E. MARXEN were arrested and brought before Commissioner BETTS, yesterday, on complaint of FRANK MEIER, a Custom-house officer. He alleged that CHARLES smuggled into this port, by means of false-bottomed trunks, on the steam-ship Calabria, from Liverpool, several thousand dollars' worth of gold watches and jewelry, and that U. E. MARXEN smuggled a similar amount of valuables by the same contrivance, on the steam-ship Alsatia, from Hamburg. He also testified that he (MARXEN) offered him $1,000 to pass the goods. They were arrested by Deputy Marshal PURVIS, as they were on the point of starting for Savannah, having packed up their goods ready for flight. They are now lying in Ludlow-street Jail, awaiting examination.

The Jumel Ejectment Suit.

In regard to the point raised in the Jumel case, whether a client should be compelled to reply to questions in regard to arrangements made by him with his counsel, Judge SHIPMAN decided, yesterday, following the precedent of Judge WOODRUFF, that the client should answer such questions. The examination of GEORGE BOWEN, the plaintiff, was then resumed, when it came out that originally he had made an agreement, with Messrs. EDMUNDS and FIELDS to prosecute his claim for a retaining fee of $500 and one-third of all property recovered. This agreement was afterward rescinded, and an arrangement entered into with one JOSEPH TUCKER, of San Francisco, by which the latter was to advance BOWEN money from time to time at seven per cent. interest on each loan, and was to have ten per cent. of all property recovered. MATILDA L. ULRICH, who claimed to be a grand-neice of Madame JUMEL, testified that in the Summer of 1866, NELSON CHASE and his counsel, Mr. CARTER, called on her mother and wanted to see the family records that her mother asked him why he was looking around for DEED, when there was GEORGE WASHINGTON BOWEN, in Providence, who was the son of Madame JUMEL; that Mr. CHASE replied that he knew all about that, but BOWEN was no more to her than the greatest stranger, as he was an illegitimate child. She further testified that Madame JUMEL had called on her mother, and asked that the visits be returned, but her mother refused, saying she did not like the class of people in Madame JUMEL'S house.

JUDICIAL BULLYING.

How Proceedings are Sometimes Conducted in the Police Courts—Severe Criticism on Justice Scott—A Prisoner Refused Examination.

In the case of The People ex rel. CUMMINGS, an application was made on certiorari, yesterday, before Judge BARRETT, in Supreme Court Chambers, for the prisoner's discharge, on the ground that there was not sufficient testimony before the Magistrate to warrant his commitment. It appeared that CUMMINGS was committed on the charge of being implicated in the assault and robbery committed on a man in the Marion House, corner of Prince and Crosby streets, on the 27th of January last. Mr. JOHN D. TOWNSEND stated to the Court that, being called upon by CUMMINGS to act as his counsel, and being assured by him that he was not present at the commission of the act charged, application was made to Justice SCOTT for an examination; that the Magistrate asked him (counsel) what he wanted an examination for; that such an examination could do no good, and that the complainant was sick and could not attend; that he (Mr. TOWNSEND) then hunted up the complainant, BERONSKI, and found him in a lager-beer saloon, by no means certain as to CUMMINGS being one of the parties who assaulted him. He (Mr. TOWNSEND) then insisted upon an examination, and presented before Justice SCOTT four witnesses who swore they saw the whole affair, and that the prisoner was not present. SCOTT, at the close of the examination, asked if that was all, and then, without any cross-examination of the witnesses added: "Committed without bail." He found, on looking at the return, that after this one of his witnesses had been recalled. He (counsel) was treated in that Court, he said, as if he were the criminal instead of his counsel, and as if SCOTT were not in a Court but in a beer-garden.

Mr. SULLIVAN, who appeared on behalf of the People, said that there was no entry on the back of the papers that the commitment was without bail, but he supposed no bail being fixed, that it was equivalent to such commitment. In the affidavit of the complainant, CUMMINGS was identified as well as JAMES and DONOVAN. Under a charge of this character he supposed the prisoners would have to be admitted to bail, but he hoped his Honor would fix the amount high.

Mr. TOWNSEND repeated that all he had said he was willing to put in the form of an affidavit; that the treatment of counsel in some of the Police Courts, where not subservient to the Court, was such that it was a degradation to go through the attempt to get justice for their clients. In this case there was not one particle of evidence against CUMMINGS.

Judge BARRETT examined the papers carefully, and deciding that there was no evidence against him, ordered his discharge. In the case of BRADY, another of the parties charged, and in whose behalf a similar writ had been granted, he thought the evidence sufficient, and fixed his bail at $5,000.

THE BUILDING RECORD.

Proposed New Buildings.

The following is the list of new buildings proposed for erection in this City since the last report, and for the week ending Thursday, Feb. 1, 1872. The report is an official one, from plans filed at the office of JAMES M. MAGGREGOR, Superintendent of the Department of Buildings:

POLITICAL NOTES.

"The success of the liberal Republicans is our success," says an outspoken but indiscreet Democratic paper in Indiana.

Some of the Kentucky Republicans urge a postponement of their State Convention. It is called for the 13th of March.

Hon. GODLOVE S. ORTH is becoming very prominent as a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Indiana.

The Iowa Legislature has eight women among its officials. Three of these favor woman suffrage and five oppose it.

The proposition to increase the pay of New-Jersey's law-makers is popular with both political parties.

The Florida Republican State Convention to select delegates to the National Convention and organize the party for the campaign, is to be held in Jacksonville, on Wednesday, April 10.

The leading Democratic paper in Indiana is not displeased with the suggestion of HENDRICKS and CURTIN as a Presidential ticket "to beat GRANT."

Hon. JOHN B. GRINNELL, of Iowa, does not favor the re-election of President GRANT. The recent Republican State Convention of Iowa voted unanimously in favor of his re-election.

The Kentucky law to admit negro testimony in the Courts was finally passed by both Houses of the Legislature, with an amendment making the law applicable to cases now pending.

The Pennsylvania Republican State Convention is to be held in Harrisburg, on Wednesday, April 10. It will nominate candidates for Presidential Electors, Governor and Supreme Judge, and for Auditor-General, should the Legislature authorize an election for the last named. Delegates to the National Convention will also be chosen.

To an interviewing reporter, Gen. HANCOCK remarked concerning the Democratic Presidential nomination: "I do not desire to have anything to say upon the subject, but you can state that I never decline anything before it is offered to me, and of course I could not have declined the Presidency. I should, however, prefer to be considered not a candidate, rather than to appear as seeking the office."

The Chicago Times insists that the new Illinois Liquor law is "a Democratic law, predicated upon and intended to carry out a very substantial and long recognized Democratic principle, namely, that government should have nothing to do with rights, but to assure their greatest freedom to all by providing for the punishment of wrongs. This law," it continues, "interferes with no man's right to sell liquor. It says to him only: 'You must not abuse the right, for the abuse of right is a wrong, and if you do the wrong, I will punish you.'"

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

At the Exchange, yesterday, Feb. 2, JAMES M. MALLER, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure under the direction of D. P. INGRAHAM, Jr., Esq., referee, sold the five-story and cellar brick tenement-house and lot, the latter 25 by 75, located on the south side of Delancey-street, 35 feet west of Pitt-street, for $19,600; purchaser, FREDERICK ENDRES. At a Sheriff's sale, WM. KENNELLY also sold a leasehold property on the south side of Ninth-street, 184 feet west of Fourth-avenue, embracing a lot 25 by 96.11, with the improvements thereon, for $7,000; purchaser, CHAS. A. JACKSON. In the parties charged, and in whose behalf a similar writ had been granted, he thought the evidence sufficient, and fixed his bail at $5,000.

Bonds $1,000 each coupons, January and July, principal and interest payable in New-York. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company own the majority of the capital stock of $4,000,000 of this Company, and the completion in October last, of the branch of sixteen miles from Dresden to Zanesville, Ohio, has afforded a direct connection for the valuable local traffic of this section of the State with the system of roads controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and in addition thereto, makes a line to Cincinnati as favorable in character as any existing line.

We confidently recommend these Bonds as a good investment, being issued at the rate of only $10,000 per mile, on a completed road, or only about one-third of its cost.

E. W. CLARK & CO., PHILADELPHIA.
CLARK, DODGE & CO., NEW-YORK.

In view of the small amount per mile of the first mortgage upon the Cincinnati and Muskingum Valley Railroad, and the fact that the present business of the line, without Eastern connection, has been more than sufficient to meet the interest upon its indebtedness, I regard the bonds of this Company as a perfectly safe security. J. EDGAR THOMSON.

EIGHT PER CT. BONDS,

OF GREENE COUNTY,

State of Missouri.

The attention of investors is called to the above Bonds, which are issued to the Kansas City and Memphis branch of the Hannibal and St. Joseph Railroad Company. The total debt of Greene County, prior to the issue of these bonds, was about $15,000. The assessed valuation of taxable property—which is estimated at half its actual value—is $6,713,078, in addition to which some $2,000,000 of railroad property will become taxable for the first time during the present year.

The entire issue of these bonds is $400,000, in coupon bonds of $1,000 each, bearing date Aug. 1, 1871, and maturing in twenty years. Interest, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, is payable in New-York on the first days of February and August in each year. We are authorized to offer this loan to the public at 80 and accrued interest, with the reserved right to advance the price at any time. At this price they pay OVER ELEVEN PER CENT. on the investment.

Government and other marketable securities received in exchange at current rates, we paying express charges both ways.

Pamphlets, &c., with full particulars, or any further information, will be furnished upon application, either personally or by letter.

Midland Railroad

FIRST MORTGAGE

7 Per Cent. Gold Bonds,

LIMITED TO $30,000 PER MILE ON FINISHED ROAD.

The rapid progress toward completion of this great Trunk Line from New-York to the West and to Canada, enables us to offer to investors at PAR AND INTEREST a further limited issue of these favorite securities.

Upward of 340 miles of this road, including the New-Jersey section, are already finished, equipped, and in operation; and contracts with responsible parties have been made for its entire completion by the first day of July next. When this shall have been accomplished its earnings cannot fail to be large and highly remunerative, as it has advantages at least equal to those of any of its competitors for both local and through business. It is building for cash, of which nearly $8,000,000 have been furnished by subscription to its stock at PAR. The work is substantial, and, including equipment, has not exceeded in cost $50,000 per mile, which is less than one-third of the amount at which some of the trunk lines of roads leading from New-York are capitalized, and on which they are paying good dividends.

In view of these facts, the Midland First Mortgage Bonds must be regarded as a first-class security—quite as safe as Governments; and, by making the exchange at the present difference in price, holders of Midland Bonds will receive 33 per cent. more of revenue upon the amount invested than the holders of Government Bonds.

A FIRST-CLASS NEW-YORK SECURITY AT A LOW PRICE.

The undersigned offer for sale the FIRST MORTGAGE SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD BONDS of the Syracuse and Chenango Valley Railroad, at 95 and accrued interest.

This road runs from the City of Syracuse to Smith's Valley, where it unites with the New-York Midland Railroad, thus connecting that city by a direct line of road with the Metropolis.

Its length is forty-two miles, its COST ABOUT $40,000 PER MILE, and it is MORTGAGED FOR LESS THAN $12,000 PER MILE; the balance of the funds required for its construction having been raised by subscription to the capital stock.

The road approaches completion. It traverses a populous and fertile district of the State, which insures it a paying business, and it is under the control of gentlemen of high character and ability. Its bonds possess all the requisites of an inviting investment. They are amply secured by a mortgage for LESS THAN ONE-THIRD THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY. They pay SEVEN PER CENT. GOLD INTEREST, and are offered five per cent. below par. The undersigned confidently recommend them to all classes of investors.

FIRST MORTGAGE

GOLD BONDS.

THIRTY YEARS TO RUN, AND ISSUED FOR $20,000 PER MILE.

This road forms the shortest and most direct route from the great anthracite and semi-bituminous coal fields of Pennsylvania into the central part of this State, and will run in connection with the New-York Central Road, which it crosses at Cayuga Bridge. Traversing, as it does, the finest and most populous agricultural district, generally known as the "GARDEN OF THE STATE," its local traffic will be large, but its greatest source of revenue will be from its coal business. The road is being rapidly built, and will be in active operation during this year. From our knowledge of this enterprise, and after the most thorough investigation, we most confidently recommend the Bonds as a safe investment. We offer, for the present, the Bonds at 90 and accrued interest in currency.

THE SAVINGS BANKS.

The Bowling-Green, the Third-Avenue and the Market Banks.

How "Hank" Smith's Institution was Mismanaged—The Financial Statement of the Third-Avenue Bank Officials—Scenes at the Market Bank.

THE BOWLING-GREEN BANK.

"Hank" Smith's Statement Contradicted in Every Particular—Glaring Frauds—Thousands of Dollars Loaned to Fictitious Persons.

The long-expected manifesto from Mr. "HANK" SMITH, President of the collapsed Bowling-green Savings Bank, appeared in the morning journals yesterday. In this Mr. SMITH attempts to refute the serious charges brought against him by the Investigating Committee of the depositors of the Bowling-green Bank which appeared in these columns on the 26th of January. The first statement Mr. SMITH makes is, that since the suspension of the bank he has had no doubt that the depositors would ultimately be paid in full. To this the Investigating Committee have not one word to say, only earnestly hoping that such may prove to be the case. Mr. SMITH next says that since February, 1869, he has had little or nothing to do with the affairs of the bank, a fact which was known to the trustees and a large number of the depositors. In answer to this the following fact is submitted: Mr. FOX, then a trustee of this bank, in July, 1871, previous to his departure for Europe, called at the bank upon Mr. SMITH and Mr. ROCHE, in their official capacities, to inquire into the then condition of the bank. Mr. SMITH informed Mr. FOX that the bank was in a most flourishing state, and that he had $70,000 of the funds of the bank lying idle for want of a good investment. To show that Mr. SMITH was premeditated to be interested in the affairs of the bank at a more recent date the following letter is submitted, which speaks for itself:

NEW-YORK, Jan. 31, 1872.

Messrs. R. E. Selmes, Henry Smith and Walter Roche:

Please pay to the Tenth National the interest on your loan of Nov. 14:

For $30,000, interest to Dec. 31.....$182 78
For $20,000, interest to Jan. 31.....120 55

Total.....$303 33

Respectfully yours,
G. ACKERMAN, Acting Cashier.

Mr. SMITH next presents a statement of the present financial condition of the bank, which concludes with the remarkable announcement that the deficiency amounts only to $17,773 25. In answer to this the depositors have obtained a copy of the statement of the bank of 22d of July, 1871, sworn to by HENRY SMITH as President, and WALTER ROCHE as acting Secretary. In this statement they found the following stocks, upon which money was declared to have been loaned, entered as part of the property of the bank, which they affirm did not then exist in the bank, and not one dollar of which, from the closest investigation, has been discovered since the suspension of the bank:

	Par Value.	Amount loaned thereon.
United States 5-20 bonds, 1865	$100,000	$50,000
United States 10-40 bonds	45,000	40,000
Street Improvement bonds of the City of New-York	20,000	20,000
Water stock of New-York	30,000	23,080
Central Park Improvement bonds	40,000	35,000
Tennessee State bonds	15,000	10,000
Alabama State bonds	35,000	20,000
Western Pacific Railroad Gold bonds	5,000	3,700
Union Pacific Railroad Gold bonds	8,000	4,750
New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company's Certificates	10,000	9,000
Chicago and Rock-Island Railroad bonds	10,000	9,000
National Bank, Newbern, N. C.	6,100	5,500
Broadway and Seventh-avenue Railroad Company	20,000	12,000
Tenth National Bank, New-York	12,500	10,000
Bushwick-avenue Railroad stock	5,000	3,000
Fairfield County Assurance Company	7,500	5,000
Avenue C Railroad Company's bonds	75,000	40,000
Rondout and Oswego Railroad bonds	15,000	7,262
Total		$307,873

In addition to these large figures, the statement contains the entry of $40,000 worth of railroad stock, upon which $22,000 was loaned; which stock, upon investigation, proves to have amounted to $20,000 only. So that, in all, it is clear that the immense sum of $309,873 was loaned by Mr. "HANK" SMITH and his confrères without a particle of security of any kind being given. Mr. SMITH does not attempt to explain this little discrepancy, but the Committee of Depositors, after a careful search, have discovered the following names of personal friends of SMITH, ROCHE and SELMES, who were allowed to "borrow" $94,160 91. This list may explain part of the discrepancy, and with that purpose, and guaranteeing its correctness, the Committee submit it to the public:

Church, F. B. Fisher—Smith	$221 79
Kingsley—Smith	1,000 00
Colbor—Roche	15,570 28
Flynn—Smith	2,850 00
Walbridge—Smith	1,000 00
Muir—$85 80, Roche	1,700 00
Colgan—Roche	1,743 59
Milliman—Smith	1,000 00
A. T. H. Stewart—Smith	750 00
Welton—Smith	600 00
Avenue C Railroad Company—Roche	50,000 00
Birdsall—Smith	266 90
Stoddart—Smith	500 00
Kassahan—Smith	1,000 00
Jno. T. McGorron—Roche	930 00
De Long—Roche	1,538 46
Hoffman—Smith	1,249 74
Kain—Roche	1,250 00
Capel—Selmes	3,084 65
Total	$94,165 91
"Interest"	5,854 09
Total	$100,000 00

After the most careful scrutiny, the Committee emphatically declare that these are purely fictitious names, and they unhesitatingly affirm that these fictitious loans were part of the transactions of the President, the statement of SMITH to the contrary notwithstanding.

The next point to which it is thought necessary to draw attention is the item of real estate, which Mr. SMITH, in his statement, values at $92,000, "low figure." The Investigation Committee have been at work on this item, and found that the original value of this real estate was fixed at $169,350. A mortgage of $108,330 90 was obtained upon this property shortly after its purchase, and again the day previous to the collapse of the bank, another mortgage of $30,000 was obtained by ROCHE, the Secretary, which leaves the present actual value of this property at $30,819 10, or $56,180 90 less than the "low figure" at which it is estimated by Mr. SMITH.

As a further addition to the liabilities of the bank, the Guardian Savings Bank present a claim of $58,000, which will have to be deducted from the assets. Among the startling items of positive frauds discovered by the Investigating Committee, $21,000 has been traced to WALTER ROCHE, which they can prove to have been appropriated by him for his own particular use and benefit.

Another item, which, in comparison with the rest, is a mere trifle, is that of the safe and fixtures, valued at $5,000. This item being included in the assets, it might be presumed that the safe and fixtures had been paid for. Such, however, does not appear to be the case, as two days ago a bill of $4,000 was received from the notorious MCBRIDE DAVIDSON for this identical safe.

These are the principal results of the labors of the Depositors' Investigating Committee, who desire at the same time, as an illustration of the character of the officials of this bank, to say that when it became known that the Guardian Bank intended paying its depositors in full, Mr. WALTER ROCHE and others hunted up the depositors of that institution, and, by false representations, bought up their claims to the amount of several thousand dollars, and cleared from forty-five to sixty per cent. by the transaction.

A meeting of the depositors of the Bowling-green Bank will be held on Monday, the 5th of February, when the sense of the meeting will be taken on the question whether "HANK" SMITH, ROCHE and others shall not be criminally prosecuted for having appropriated the funds of the depositors of the Bowling-green Savings Bank.

The Third-Avenue Bank—The Statement at Last—Surplus, $11,285 27—Assets, $5,092,610 44.

The long-expected statement of the Third-avenue Savings Bank is published this morning. The statement is a very full and complete one, and may have the effect of restoring confidence in the public mind. The amount of stocks possessed by this Bank is $1,656,600, the majority of which are New-York State and City bonds, Brooklyn and Jersey bonds. The "rotten" Southern bonds, about which so much has been said in certain morning journals, prove to be $225,000 worth of Georgian, Louisiana, and Alabama. All these are old bonds, which Mr. LYON the President declare can be sold today at a premium. The amount of real estate is unusually large, and speaks for itself. The Tarrytown property, which has also been the subject of much unfavorable comment, has already been sold upon exceptional terms. The surplus is very small, being only $11,285 27, in view of which the trustees, at a meeting held last night, have expressed a willingness to increase it by contributing the sum of $50,000.

The Market Savings Bank—The Present Condition of Affairs—Affecting Incidents—The Proceedings in Bankruptcy.

Affairs at the Market Bank presented no change yesterday. The doors were again thrown open, and a large number of depositors availed themselves of the opportunity to enter and gaze at the place where their money had been put for safe (?) keeping. The petition praying for a stay in the bankruptcy proceeding received a large number of signatures during the day, up to 2 P. M. 400 in all depositors having signed it. Mr. WORTH, the receiver, was present during the whole day, and his time was almost entirely occupied in conversing with the luckless depositors, who vainly endeavored to obtain a few crumbs of comfort from him. He was agreeably surprised to find two calloans to the extent of $3,000 which he had looked upon as irretrievably bad, promptly paid yesterday morning. He had called in all the other loans, and was converting the few good securities of the bank as rapidly as possible. In conversation with a TIMES reporter, Mr. DENNIS frankly stated that in the close investigation which he made of the condition of the bank, he could not honestly say he had found $1 that had been lost by accident, by unfortunate investment or any commercial reason that might affect ordinary business; every cent of the large deficit due to the depositors, he firmly believed to have been squandered, stolen or misappropriated.

Every day since the collapse of this bank, painful and sometimes heartrending scenes were to be observed among the victimized depositors, but yesterday two incidents occurred of a very touching nature, which may be fairly taken as a sample of what is daily taking place. One old woman who described herself as a laundress, and bore the appearance of an honest and hard-working woman, inquired anxiously when she would be likely to obtain any portion of her money, as she was in sore need of it. Mr. WORTH asked the amount of her deposit, to which she replied, "Twelve hundred dollars." He expressed surprise at a person of her appearance being possessed of such a sum, when the poor old woman, bursting into tears, exclaimed: "I've worked for that money for more than ten years, and now I am in want."

The other case was that of a well-dressed and exceedingly gentlemanly old man, who bore traces of recent suffering in his face, and in a broken and almost inarticulate voice said: "Mr. WORTH, I am a lawyer, my name is ——, and I have $4,000 deposited in your bank." Mr. WORTH expressed his regret both at the circumstance and his inability to assist the gentleman, at the same time expressing a hope that the loss of such a sum would not affect one apparently so well off as he appeared to be. "It is all I have in the world," said the old man. "I have a young sick daughter at home who is entirely dependent upon me for the comforts and necessities of life, which up to the present I have been able to provide for her. On last Wednesday I told her as gently as I could of my utter ruin, and—and—yesterday afternoon I took her to a lunatic asylum." Here the poor old man could maintain his firmness no longer; the tears he endeavored to repress came streaming down his face, and almost blinded with them, he rushed out of the bank into the street and mingled with the crowd. Mr. NORTH expressed himself as heartsickened with such scenes; the more so as he was able to afford so little satisfaction to the sufferers.

The TIMES reporter called upon Mr. F. DOWLEY, the Chairman of the Depositors' Investigating Committee. Mr. DOWLEY, who is a lawyer, expresses his belief that the bankruptcy proceedings which are to be brought up today will be suspended. The number of signatures to the petition necessary to cause a stay in the proceedings, is two-thirds of the depositors. This number there is no chance of obtaining, but Mr. DOWLEY thinks that, in view of the criminal mismanagement and glaring frauds discovered in the conduct of the bank, Judge BLATCHFORD will not deny the petition. A very important meeting of the depositors will be held on Monday, at 2 o'clock, in the First District Court.

HON. GEORGE BANCROFT.

His Letter Founding the New Fellowship for Harvard College.

The Boston Advertiser publishes the following letter from Hon. GEORGE BANCROFT, proposing to found a traveling fellowship at Harvard College, and explaining his reasons for making the gift. This is the first foundation of the kind established in an American college, although such things are common enough abroad, and President ELIOT, in his report to the Board of Overseers, says, "the Corporation are as much obliged to Mr. BANCROFT for his suggestive and tempting example as for his actual gift."

AMERICAN LEGATION, BERLIN, July 4, 1871.

SIR: It has long been my wish to raise a memorial to one of your predecessors, JOHN THORNTON KIRKLAND, and to requite benefits received through him. During a long life, in which I have had the opportunity of seeing many men, in divers lands, famed for mind and accomplishments, I have seen few who were his equals, and no one who knew better than he how to deal with his fellow men. His manners were marked by dignity and benignity; they invited confidence and repelled familiarity. A scholar and a man of the world, he was honored and beloved in every circle in Boston and by all classes in the college. With severe reproofs of misconduct he mingled so much humaneness and so easy and natural appeals to the better elements of character in those whom he was obliged to censure, that his reproof acted like a benediction, and they who received it left his presence abashed, penitent, grateful and attached. To those who showed aptitudes for literary pursuits he was an unfailing friend, treating them with paternal regard while under his care, and watching their career in life with never-ceasing interest. There was not in his nature a trace of anything that was mean or narrow. He was always and everywhere devoid of envy or contention or repining, and was throughout large and liberal and generous and genial in thought and life. All who knew him well regretted that he did not write more for the public, for it seemed to them that no one in America, of his day, understood English so well, and that no one had, like him, the intuitive knowledge of human passions and character. He was suited to any high public office, was ever the honored companion of statesmen, and fit to be the peer of the best of them; but he was satisfied with bringing the university over which he presided into a condition more worthy of the arts and sciences which it undertook to teach, and of the affection and benevolence of the community with which it had grown up and prospered. He opened the ways through which it had passed onward to its present eminent condition, and his noble influence still survives to assist you. Sir, in bringing time-honored Harvard still nearer to the excellence which the present age hopes for and expects.

A little more than fifty-three years ago, EDWARD EVERETT, then Eliot professor of Greek literature, in one his letters to President KIRKLAND, developed the idea that it would be well to send some young graduate of Harvard to study for a while at a German university, with a view to his being called to a place on the college board. The President approved the suggestion, and his choice from the traveling scholarship fell upon me. Accordingly, in the early Summer of 1818, being then in my eighteenth year, I proceeded to Göttingen. After remaining more than three years in Europe, I returned to Cambridge, where I held the office of tutor for one year. There being no opening for a permanent connection with the university, I devoted a few years to an attempt to introduce among us some parts of the German system of education, so as to divide more exactly preliminary studies from the higher scientific courses, and thus facilitate the transformation of our colleges into universities, after the plan every where adopted in Germany. But it is not easy to change an organization that has its roots in the habits of the country. And the experiment could not succeed, for it was impossible to introduce the German usage which permits students to pass freely from a private place of instruction to a public one, without the exaction of payments for instruction elsewhere received.

I then applied through the late Judge CHAS. JACKSON, a member of the corporation and a friend of mine, for leave to read lectures on history in the university. At Göttingen or at Berlin I had the right, after a few preliminary formalities, to deliver such a course. It was the only time in my life that I applied for an office for myself as a permission that I desired. My request was declined by my own alma mater, so that I had not the opportunity of manifesting my affection for her by personal services; and my life has had, in consequence, unexpected variety and independence. But wherever my lot has been thrown, I have always preserved in freshness and strength the love which I bore to Harvard College in my youth; and now, in my old age, I still gladly seek an opportunity of proving that attachment.

I wish, therefore, to found a scholarship on the idea of President KIRKLAND, that the incumbent should have leave to repair to a foreign country for instruction. Merit must be the condition of the election to the scholarship; no one is to be elected who has not shown uncommon ability and uncommon disposition to learn. Of course the choice should fall on some one who needs the subsidy.

You, Sir, as the successor of Dr. KIRKLAND, may know the funds out of which came the modest but sufficient stipend which I received; and if so, I leave it to you and the corporation to impose any limitations that you think right. Otherwise, residence at the university, but not for more than three years, may be required. But the residence should have reference to any of the schools of divinity, law, or medicine, or of mines, or of science, or of any other school that is or may be founded, not less than to the classes of the undergraduates. I think, in an exceptional case, there should be authority to name the scholar from any place, without any previous residence at Cambridge; and, if you and the corporation approve, I wish it to be so established.

The scholarship should be held by no one for more than three years, and during that time should be renewed from year to year; but only on evidence that the scholar is fulfilling the purpose of the endowment. I leave to you and to the corporation to circumscribe, if, from the considerations already referred to, you think best, the objects of study to which the incumbent should devote himself. But, for my own part, I am willing the scholarship should be given to any young person likely to distinguish himself in either of the learned professions, or in any branch of science, or in architecture, sculpture, painting, music or letters.

To constitute the necessary fund I propose to devote the sum of $10,000, to be safely invested, the income to be given to the scholar. Living never sought for any inheritances, and having never engaged in any lucrative pursuit, I cannot at once pay into the treasury of the university the whole sum, of which I yet hope to make and complete the payment during my life. But as life is always uncertain, and the life of an old man so surely near its close, I wish you, without delay, to have drawn a paper for me to sign that shall bind myself to pay annually at least $2,000 a year, until the whole sum of $10,000 shall be discharged; and in case of my death before the payments are completed, to bind my executors to pay the balance that may remain due, within one year after my decease. The interest that will accrue on installments that may be paid from time to time is not to be reckoned in discharge of any part of the principal, but is to be added to the principal, and will in so far enlarge the fund. I wish the scholarship to bear the name of John Thornton Kirkland.

Pray consult the corporation; and if you will then send for my signature the paper that will bind me and my executors to what I have set forth, it will be promptly executed and returned to you.

One word more. The incumbents of the scholarship may, perhaps, be afterward drawn into the corps of Professors at the University; should they render no such service, and should they be prospered in life, I wish each of them so prospered to be reminded, and, excepting always those permanently connected with the University as instructors, and those whose moderate wants press upon their means, I thus in advance charge them to imitate my example in rendering aid, through Harvard College, to the cause of arts and letters, of science and learning.

I remain, Sir, yours sincerely,
GEORGE BANCROFT.

President ELIOT, President of Harvard College.

Jersey City Charter Amendments.

A Committee of citizens of Jersey City has for some time been engaged in revising the city charter, and has prepared a number of important amendments for presentation to the Legislature. These provide for a bureau of surveying to be run at an expense of not more than $50,000 a year, to do the work of the present surveyors, whose charges against the city since the consolidation have amounted to some hundreds of thousands of dollars; they do away with the clause making the Mayor ex-officio member of the several Boards; the Police Commissioners instead of the Board of Aldermen are to have the power to license all dram-shops; the amount of exnenditure in any one year is not to be greater than two per cent. on the assessed valuation of property for 1871. The most important of these amendments relates to the Board of Finance, which it is proposed to free entirely from any connection with or control by any of the other Boards.

GETTYSBURG WATER
CURES.

Those who are disposed to class the Gettysburg Katalysine Water with the quack medicines and the new mineral spring waters of the day, may easily disabuse their minds of this impression by reference to the "United States Dispensatory," the highest authority known to druggists or physicians. By turning to page 159 of the thirteenth revised edition of this work, they will perceive that the Gettsburg Spring of some eight years of age is classed with the European Vichy and Pyrmont, as many hundred years old; in other words, is assigned the foremost rank among the great aqueous medicines of the world. This work is kept by all druggists. We prefer that all who read this advertisement shall adopt this precaution against deception. After having done so they will be better prepared to credit the testimony of practicing physicians, of medical writers and medical journalists, to its great and varied curative powers. We can only briefly refer to the specification of the curative virtues of the Gettysburg Waters by these authorities. We will precede these references by a quotation from the remarks of Dr. Bell, an eminent American physician and medical author upon the new semi-therapeutical and chemical power discovered in this water, that of dissolving calculus or stone in the human system. As the stony particles or concretions known as calculus, and the excess of acids which produce them, are ascertained to be the remote or immediate cause of our prevalent chronic maladies, if not, indeed, of all diseases, it logically results that the Gettysburg Water must be the most extensive remedial agency ever known to the race. Whether it is so or not, let medical men decide. Dr. Bell thus refers to its solution of one of the forms of calculus, that known as "chalk-stones," or the Nodosities of Rheumatism and Gout:

"Recourse to all known therapeutical agents and modes of treatment are ineffectual beyond, sometimes, a reduction of the size of the nodes of a gouty or rheumatic nature by absorption of a part of the outer and investing structure. But the entire removal of the inorganic body without surgical intervention, has not, we believe, hitherto been brought about by either internal remedies or external applications, or by both united. In the case now under notice, we cannot believe that the absorbents would be equal to the task of sucking up, as it were, the deposited inorganic matter, unless this deposit had been subjected to the so vent action of the blood brought to the part by the delicate capillaries. Whence comes this solvent property?" He further adds that it has produced signally curative and restorative effects upon different forms of Dyspepsia, Sickness of the Stomach, Heartburn, Waterbrash, Acute Neuralgic Pains, Loss of Appetite, Chronic Diarrhea, Torpid Liver, Gout, Chronic Rheumatism, Nodosites of the Joints, Approaching and Actual Paralysis, Diabetes, General Debility, Hematuria, Abdominal Dropsy, Cholera Infantum, Genito Urinary Disorders, &c., &c. The New-York Medical Record, one of our leading medical journals, states as the result of the experience of one of its editors with this Water that, "from experiments made on our own person as well as others, we can state that the Gettysburg Water is a regulator of all the secretions and excretions; under its influence the kidneys and liver, the glands of the intestinal canal and the skin, all perform their normal functions; the bowels, if constipated, become regular; the skin, if dry, becomes moist; the torpid liver is excited to healthy action, and the kidneys perform their functions with perfect regularity. There is a total abstinence of any disagreeable sensations whatever; the vis medicatrix seems roused to increased activity, and all morbid causes of bodily or even mental disorder seem rapidly to pass away. The result is: Increased appetite and digestion, a freer circulation, a stronger pulse, a calmer mind, a more tranquil sleep, a clearer complexion, and an increasing nervous and muscular power." * * * The Medical and Surgical Reporter of Philadelphia, another of our leading medical journals, thus editorially refers to this wonderful Water: "As a mild alkaline Water it is found to be adapted to dyspepsia, with its numerous sequences and complications, including disorder of the liver and kidneys; the remote effects of imperfect assimilation as exhibited in gout, chronic rheumatism, neuralgia, and an impoverished state of the blood, or anemia."

Dr. Hull, of No. 40 West 24th-st., New-York, has prescribed the Gettysburg Water successfully for Bright's Disease, and in one instance for Albuminuria, associated with or resulting in Total Paralysus of the lower extremities and incapacity to turn or move on the bed for years without assistance

THE MAGAZINES.

—It would be almost impossible for a magazine to continue at a standard of excellence as high as that attained by the Atlantic of last month. So we were prepared for a decline in this respect in the present number, but are happy to say that it is by no means as marked as we had anticipated. HAWTHORNE's tale of "Septimius Felton" increases greatly in interest. The last two pages are especially noticeable for the keen analysis the author has made of the workings of the human mind under peculiar circumstances, and nothing can be truer or more delicate than the description of the half-doubtful, introspective love of an intellectual man. "Wagner and the Pianist Billow," by ALICE ASBURY, consists of an article aggressively hostile toward the former of these two musicians, in which both he and his works come in for a fair share of abuse. The latter are termed "chaotic," "bombastic," and "meretricious," a judgment that ill accords with the very general praise that is now being given to the composer of the "Music of the Future." "The Visible and the Invisible in Protection," by EDWARD ATKINSON, is a very clear, practical exposition of many of the features in the present Tariff laws that prevent the free development of our country. Mr. ATKINSON contends that, had the $60,000,000 collected last year on foreign imports, and used in the unnecessary reduction of the national debt, been left uncollected, it would have increased the available capital for business uses to the amount of $600,000,000, i. e., additional capital to that amount could have been used profitably in manufacture had these restrictions been removed. Dr. HOLMES, in "The Poet at the Breakfast Table," gives a very amusing sketch of his fellow-boarders, wishing, doubtless, to allow his readers to become well acquainted with the household before beginning the treatment of distinctly poetical subjects, which the title he has taken leads one to expect. "Petronilla," by ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS, is a poem of really great merit, as is also—though for entirely different reasons—"A Norse Stav," by Hjalmer Hjorth Boyesen. "The Castlewood Tragedy," by ALICE DUTTON, is a vivid picture of Southern life before the war. Col. HIGGINSON takes the reader to row with him "In a Wherry" around Newport Harbor, and likewise favors him with a delightful talk about everything in general. "The Comedy of Terrors," "Diversions of the Echo Club," and the Life of JEFFERSON, are all continued. A poem by Mrs. S. M. B. PIATT and W. E. CHANNING, and a series of admirable summaries on "Literature," "Art," "Music," "Science," and "Politics" complete the contents of the number.

—Harper's contains a number of articles of more than average excellence. The opening paper, "The Scott Centenary," by MONCURE D. CONWAY, is decidedly the best account of that celebration we have read, and it is really refreshing to peruse it after the hundreds of pages of inane matter that the event has produced. The principal events in the life of the great writer are treated with the utmost care, Mr. CONWAY justly believing that the true opinion of a man's character can be determined by knowing what his actions were under given circumstances, and thus a waste of barren detail may be profitably omitted. JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE furnishes another paper on "Holland and Hollanders." In this he describes a visit to the diamond cutting establishments at Amsterdam, which, as every one knows, is the centre of the diamond trade. He does not seem to have been greatly impressed with the proverbial cleanliness of the Dutch, which he found to be confined solely to the interior of their house, and there, even, from reasons of necessity rather than natural inclination. The illustrations in both the preceding articles are admirably done. Rev. Dr. OSGOOD contributes another paper on what might be called the science of statistics; it is under the title of "The Pay-roll of Christendom." To one not accustomed to close study in this particular, the facts concerning the relative moral and physical condition of different countries and different social classes which are obtained from these dry figures seem well-nigh magical. Prof. WILLIAM ATKINSON graphically describes the manner in which English is not taught in our schools, and suggests the necessary reforms to be made, in order that children may acquire something other than useless theories. "Old Books of New-York" is a gossipy sketch of a stroll through the curious library that the late Mr. GOWAN used to have in the basement of his store in Nassau-street. "The Days of Queen Anne" is a historical recollection of the distinguished men of that era, particularly SWIFT, an account of whose unhappy life is very faithfully given. ANTHONY TROLLOPE begins a very promising serial story, entitled "The Golden Lion of Granpere," and the other serial, "A Good Investment," is continued, as the reader will find, with unabated interest. There are a number of shorter stories, by popular writers; and in "The Editor's Easy-Chair," some thoughtful comments on topics of the day.

—Scribner's contains several exceptionally good magazine articles. The most interesting, both from the importance of the subject and the clear logical manner in which it is written, is a treatise entitled "Defects of the National Banking System." The author, who does not allow his name to appear, has evidently given the subject a very thorough examination; while recognizing the many advantages the system has by its unity over the heterogeneous method of the past, he is disposed to doubt the necessity of allowing the banking corporations any special privileges in order to insure this. The defects he finds, and which he asserts tax the industry of the entire country to the extent of over sixteen million dollars annually—are, the monopoly of the privilege of issuing circulation by certain favored corporations, the unfair apportionment of the privilege, the irredeemability of the bank currency, and, caused by all of these circumstances, the enormous profits of the banks. To correct this, he urges the repeal of the laws limiting the amount of bank circulation, and also those making it legal tender in payment of debts due to the Government. These views may appear startling to many, as their adoption would involve great financial changes. The free banking system has, however, received an admirable exposition from the hands of this unknown writer, and we would advise all interested in the matter to read what he says upon the subject. Prof. HAYDEN has contributed a very entertaining account of the many wonderful natural phenomena met with during his trip to the Valley of the Yellowstone. The illustrations to this article are drawn by Mr. THOMAS MORAN. In "The Mormons and Their Religion," R. H. SHERLEY has given an admirable description of the leading features in belief and practice that distinguish this peculiar religious sect, and the influence upon their future existence which the present agitation is likely to produce. "A Small Piece of the Woman Question," by LULU G. NOBLE, is a bright, clever attempt to throw light into the confusing obscurity of the woman question, by explaining how very different the actual working woman of the present is from the ideal working woman of the future. "The Charities of the Fatherland," by WM. WELLS, is full of examples of private benevolence that might be copied with great advantage by our own countrymen. "Back-Log Studies—Rosewed," by C. D. WARNER, contains four delightful papers filled with happy, suggestive matter. "At His Gates" and "Wilfrid Cumbermede" are continued, and the editorial pages treat of a variety of foreign and domestic topics in a pleasant readable manner.

—The Galaxy does not contain any article of special importance, though several can claim the merit of being highly interesting. Mr. JUSTIN MCCARTHY has another personal sketch. This time it is about JOHN RUSKIN, and the influence he has had upon English art. Although objection may be taken to the generalizing style in which Mr. MCCARTHY writes, and which smacks more of the novelist than the biographer, yet it is undoubtedly a fact that in this way he draws the attention and meets the requirements of a much larger circle of readers than he could do in any other form. Mr. ISAAC BUTTS, in "The Management of Cities," proposes a plan for municipal Government, in which the owners of property over a certain amount shall receive additional political power, a given amount of property standing as equivalent to an extra vote. Mr. BUTTS claims that this method would insure a much more rigid economy in the management of public money on the score of self-interest. While admitting that this is probably true it is well to remember—which Mr. BUTTS does not seem sufficiently to do—that any movement toward the Government of Wealth at a time when wealth can be so steadily concentrated as at present, is not a step to be lightly taken, and in its train may bring more evils than benefits. Gen. CUSTER continues his sketch of "My Life on the Plains," though thus far it has failed to have that distinctive character that the pronoun in the title would naturally lead one to look for. "Fifteen Years a Shareress," which is also continued, contains a great many facts both amusing and interesting concerning the daily social life of this very strange sect. "Suggestions of the Past; JOHN TYLER'S Administration," is somewhat confusing, from the want of certainty as to the thing suggested. The inference which the writer would seem to wish drawn from the sketch is that the Republican Party of the present day, like the Whig Party of that era, is on the point of disintegration, an analogy of fact that will not suggest itself in the least to the great proportion of his readers. "The Blessings of Sudden Death," by J. HENRI BROWNE, is well worth reading. "My Russian Friends," by ALICE GRAY, is a sketch of Russian travel; pleasing, though somewhat vague. "A Trifling Mistake," by ISABELLE AMORY, is a well-told love story on the English model; and "Drift-wood," "Club-room" and "Nebulæ" each furnish items of greater or less interest.

—Lippincott's contains a number of highly-interesting stories and one or two articles of a graver character. Of the latter is an entertaining account of the formation of "The First American Art Academy," which was inaugurated in Philadelphia in 1805, and a slightly idealistic review of the works of VICTOR HUGO, both as a dramatist, novelist and poet, by KATE HILLARD. WHYMPER'S "Scrambles Among the Alps"—the prolific source of so much adventure—will be read with unabated interest. A new serial is commenced in this number, which has only to continue as well as it has begun to prove the most entertaining story of the season. It is called "The Strange Adventures of a Phæton," and is written by WILLIAM BLACK, whose previous novel, "A Daughter of Heth," has demonstrated the fact that he is one of the first writers of fiction in England. There is a quaint individualism in the present story, which is all the more pleasing on account of its extreme rarity in works of this kind. "Aytoun," by an unknown American author, has not improved since the last number; the characters are wretchedly priggish, and the entire current of the story is forced and unnatural. "The Pompeian Necklace" is one of LUCY H. HOOPER'S absurdly exaggerated, but rather readable, tales, and "Pidgie Brant," by CHAUNCEY HICKOX; "The Case of Martin Geurre," by EVELYN ASHBY, and "A Gold Hunt on the Yelowstone," by EDWARD B. NEALLEY, complete the list of prose articles in the number. "Our Monthly Gossip" and "Literature of the Day," contain a great variety of notes on interesting topics. There are also poems of indifferent merit by CHARLES WARREN STODDARD and HOWARD GLYNDON.

—The editor of Old and New, in his customary introduction, calls the present issue a "Washington number," and proceeds to verify his statement by giving the reader six distinct articles on subjects connected directly or indirectly with the life of our first President. "The Unpublished Writings of Washington" consist of a collection of letters written for the most part during Gen. BRADDOCK'S campaign, and, with the exception that they have never before been printed, have little general interest. "Washington, the General" is a careful summary of his military movements during the Revolutionary war, and a defense of them from a strategic point of view. Then follows "Washington's Expression of Countenance," by R. S. GREENOUGH; "The Standard Likeness of Washington," by J. E. W.; "Washington Agricultural Letters," by GEORGE HANNAH, and "Contemporary Washingtonian Poetry." So completely has this subject absorbed the usual space that the general articles have been of necessity reduced in number. GEORGE MACDONALD'S "Vicar's Daughter" is continued. THOMAS MEEHAN has a capital article on "Sexual Science," demonstrating the relative superiority of the female to the male in the physical economy of nature. In the additional chapters to "Six of One by Half a Dozen of the Other," the writers seem to have acted upon the kaleidoscope plan, and to have thrown all the characters with one movement into new situations. Four poems of average merit, and a moral essay by ORVILLE DEWEY, complete the contents.

The Catholic World has two articles upon the labor question, which it considers the most important topic of the day. In "The Duties of the Rich in Christian Society" it is stated that it is only the influence of purely Christian and Catholic principals, which are that all men have a trust committed to them for the common good, that can save the wealthy classes in this country and in Europe from future destruction. In "The International Association" the ideas enunciated by WENDALL PHILIPS are examined and ably refuted. "Popular Objections to Papal Infallibility" is a defense of that dogma, in the form of a letter, supposed to be addressed to a Protestant friend. The argument is singularly free from defective reasoning, and if the premises were equally strong would be quite conclusive. The need for the establishment of distinctive Catholic libraries in the large towns and cities of the country is set forth in an article "On Catholic Libraries," and the principles upon which Mr. HERBERT SPENCER has founded his school of philosophy are reviewed in a paper on "The Cosmic Philosophy."

—In the Phrenological Journal, Rev. WILLIAM PITTENGER has a very interesting article on "Protoplasm," in which, while agreeing with Prof. HUXLEY in most that he says concerning its action in the physical support of life, he also shows that the discovery in no way conflicts with the essential principals of the Christian faith. There is an illustrated essay by Sir CHARLES BELL on "Expression—Its Anatomy and Physiology," in which the various formations of the head, as the rate of intelligence increases or declines, are described. There are also biographical sketches of JAMES DENOON REYMERT, JOSHUA WATSON, and Gov. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, besides a number of shorter articles on miscellaneous subjects.

—The American Naturalist opens with Prof. AGASSIZ'S letter "Concerning Deep-sea Dredgings." Mr. PUTNAM'S account of his investigations in Mammoth Cave is continued, the present paper being devoted to the anatomical structure of the blind fish found there. The subject is further explained by the addition of some very delicately-drawn diagrams of them. Prof. N. S. SHALER tests the Darwinian theory by applying it to the development of rattlesnakes, with very satisfactory results. The notes upon botany and scientific miscellany are unusually full and interesting.

—In Good Words, ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S last story, "The Golden Lion of Granpere," is begun. Under the title of "Hints for Essays" is a series of short papers, by the author of "The Friends in Council," written in that delightfully suggestive vein that has won for ARTHUR HELPS so much popularity in his previous works. Rev. CHARLES KINGSLEY writes on "Town Geology," and that able scientist, RICHARD A. PROCTOR, gives the results of the observations he and others have made concerning the great solar eruptions.

—Beecher's contains a sketch of the life and works of HERBERT SPENCER; a pleasantly-told description of a trip to the West, by CHAS. W. JAY, and a large variety of entertaining reading-matter on topics of popular interest.

—The Herald of Health has an interesting paper by Rev. CHARLES H. BRIGHAM on the intimate relationship existing between the soul and body, and the interdependence of one upon the other in respect to healthfulness. "Husbands and Wives" is the title of an article by the editor, which treats of a matter of the highest moral and physical importance, and in a manner at once forcible and delicate. The other contributions are on a variety of topics, and as a whole are very entertaining.

—The Eclectic offers a highly diversified intellectual treat to its readers, having lengthy articles taken from ten of the leading European periodicals and a variety of brief and light matter from miscellaneous sources. The principal selections are the "Church and State of Italy," from the Fortnightly; "Samuel Taylor Coleridge," from Blackwood's, and "The Last Tournament," from the Contemporary. There is also a fine steel portrait of Lord LISGAR, Governor-General of Canada.

—The Sunday Magazine, one of the most entertaining of the English religious periodicals, is republished in this country by LIPPINCOTT & CO. The present number contains the latest installment of GEORGE MACDONALD'S story, "The Vicar's Daughter," "How to Study the Old Testament," by W. LINDSAY ALEXANDER, D. D., a pleasant sketch by JAMES PITT, called "Out of the History of a Ragged School," and a number of other interesting papers.

—Van Nostrand's Engineering Magazine, which is the best eclectic magazine of its kind in this country, has, in the latest number, several articles of unusual interest. "Sewage as a Fertilizer of Land," from the Journal of the Society of Arts, should be read by all interested in farming matters. "Tramways and their Structure," from the same source, and "Proposed Roman Explorations," from the Builder, are equally worthy of perusal.

—The Manufacturer and Builder contains a number of highly interesting articles on scientific subjects, most of which are illustrated. Among the most important of these is a paper on the "Cleaning of Boilers," a description of "How Coin is Made at the English Mint," and "A Study in Ecclesiastical Architecture."

Reviews.

—The publication of the Southern Review has been transferred from Baltimore to St. Louis, but the editorial management remains unchanged. The most extended article in the present number is one entitled "Modern Atheism," under which heading the works of all the prominent scientific writers of the present day are included. As might be expected in so sweeping a denunciation the harsh epithet of "atheist" is applied to several who in no way deserve it; certainly no one has been more zealous in endeavoring to reconcile the claims of science with the least liberal of Christian creeds than Mr. MIVART, and his efforts must have been but feebly appreciated by a reviewer who would place him in this respect on a par with DARWIN and HUXLEY. The article throughout has little to recommend it save the evident sincerity of the writer, who loses his temper at not being able to understand the position taken by his opponents, and proceeds with an argumentum ad hominem instead of a candid criticism. To classify COMTE, TYNDALL and DARWIN as intellectual "pigmies," is so absurdly false that we are surprised that the editors of the Review allowed it to pass uncorrected. A very graphic sketch is given of the life of Gen. ALBERT SIDNEY JOHNSTON, one of the bravest officers of the Confederate army, but which will probably prove of more interest to a Southern than Northern reader. The same might be said of an article called the "Republican Party—Objects and Policy," which exhibits all too evidently the bitterness of disappointed ambition. "History of the Moravians" furnishes a very entertaining account of this sect. "The Methods of the Ancient Geometry" is somewhat too abstruse for the ordinary reader, and the remaining articles are upon theological questions.

—The National Quarterly Review opens with an admirable article on "Bohemia; its Political Vicissitudes and its Literature," which derives additional interest from the late troubles that that country has had in its connection with the Austrian Empire, and which have their origin in the ethnological divisions into which the people are separated. "Recollections of Daniel Webster" is a careful analysis of the distinguishing characteristics of that great statesman, and a sketch of those events of his life that placed him in a position relatively above all of his contemporaries. "Brittany: Its antiquaries and its Legends" is a very entertaining account of that very romantic, though least-visited part of France. "Our Quack Doctors, and How They Thrive" is one of a series of articles on public abuses that have appeared from time to time in this periodical. The present one cannot be other than productive of good, as the exposition of the nefarious business is very complete. Not less so is an article on "Insurance," which will be continued in the next issue. The remaining papers are "Fortified Cities," "Our National Finance," "Extinct Races of America—The Mound Builders," and the "Stellar Universe."

—The Presbyterian Quarterly and the Princeton Review have been consolidated, and the new publication will bear the joint names. The first number that has appeared under the combined management, contains several thoughtful and interesting papers on a variety of subjects. HERRICK JOHNSON, D. D., and LYMAN H. ATWATER, D. D., have a lengthy argument on the Biblical authority for total abstinence, the former claiming that if it is not actually stated, it is at least implied, and the latter, holding that the establishment of a dogma by which those who drink or make wine should be excluded from the privileges of the church, would be utterly wrong; that the principle contains the elements of a destructive rationalism, which would sooner or later undermine the Christian faith. "The Plymouth Brethren," by Rev. THOMAS CROSKERY, is an account of the formation, growth, and present disintegration of the religious solidarity of that name, which is one of the many abortive attempts to found a distinct sect in the Christian church. The admirable article on "Paris under the Commune," by EDMOND DE PRESSENSE, has been translated from the Revue des deux Mondes, and the remaining articles are "The Variable and Constant in Christian Apology," by C. A. ARKEN, D. D.; "The Theology of our Age and Country," by PHILIP SCHAFF, D. D.; "Jowett's Plato," by TAYLER LEWIS, LL. D.; and "Ezra, the Model of the Biblical Divine," by THOMAS E. THOMAS, D. D.

—The American Church Review for this quarter is an admirable number. The articles contained in it are all excellent, and even those on church matters have a greater general interest than is usually the case for subjects of this character. "The Church and the Laboring Classes" is a careful examination of that involved subject, the relative rights of labor and capital, and thoughtful suggestions as to the manner in which the Church may aid in solving the question. The Bishop of Western New-York has contributed an article on the growth of the Episcopal Church in America, claiming that it represents the Catholicity of the patristic days more thoroughly than any other existing church. In the paper entitled "Deaconesses" the subject of woman's religious work is very carefully considered, and many of the objections urged against the establishment of this church order, such as dress, marriage, special vocation, and the like, are fairly met and answered. "Modern Thought and its Relation to the Person of the Lord Jesus," is a comprehensive summary of the various attacks that have been made against the orthodox faith from the first publication of Dr. STRAUSS to the present time. "Changes in England During Half a Century" is a very discriminating review of the works of Mr. DISRAELI, and of the great change both social and political, as indicated by them, which have taken place during this period. "The Analysis of a Sunbeam" is a popular account of a number of the wonderful discoveries that have been made by means of the spectrum analysis. The remaining articles are "Scientific Speculation and Theological Interpretation," "Munificence in Giving," and "Regeneration in Baptism."

—The Journal of Psychological Medicine contains a paper by ISAAC LEWIS PEET, A. M., on "The Psychical Status and Criminal Responsibility of the Totally Uneducated Deaf and Dumb," in which he urges that some action should be taken to correct the present want of criminal statutes respecting crimes committed by these unfortunate beings, and also that the Legislature of this State should pass some law rendering their education obligatory. "Materialism in its Relation to the Causes, Conditions, and Treatment of Insanity," by H. B. WILBER, M. D., is a very able argument in favor of materialism, as opposed to the doctrine of moral insanity. In "The Development of Religious Ideas," Dr. JAMES J. O'DEA, traces the growth of religious belief in the human family from animism upward in its preparation for the advent of revelation. The remaining articles are by Drs. HAMMOND and CROSS, and are of great technical interest.

GERMANY.

A Grand Display of the Navy in Prospect.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

Though the German expedition across the Atlantic is deferred, and has, by the settlement of the Britain quarrel, lost its primary purpose, the project to parade the German flag in foreign climes is by no means abandoned. German papers explain the reason for the sudden countermand to be mainly one of financial expediency. The Government found that the expedition could not be undertaken for less than two millions of thalers, which it cannot well spare at present, and which it would be inconvenient to tack on to the Budget. Writing immediately before the issue of the revocation, the Correspondence de Berlin, which is edited in the Prussian Foreign Office, thus characterises the object of the expedition: "This is to be a training expedition in a grand style, intended, indeed, not merely to provide practice for the men and officers, but chiefly to introduce the German Empire as a naval Power among States, and principally among states which, in consequence of their distance from Europe, have no other test whereby to judge of the power of a European State but the number and calibre of guns coming before their eyes under its flag. The expedition is therefore to be, so to speak, a demonstration—not a demonstration against any individual State, but one that will benefit the trans-Atlantic commerce of Germany and Germans residing out of Europe."

The German Ordenfest—Honors to Prince Arthur.

In Berlin, on Jan. 18, took place the grand celebration of the anniversary of the Black Eagle Order—the decoration most coveted by Prussian subjects, and rarely conferred even on the most distinguished foreigners. The ceremony had, indeed, a peculiar interest for Englishmen, from the fact that Prince ARTHUR was solemnly invested with the insignia of the Order. Among those who figured in the assemblage were some whose names recall the great efforts by which Prussia has made herself a prominent Power of Europe—such men as VON FALCKENSTEIN, HERWARTH VON BITTENFIELD, who led up the Valley of the Elbe, in 1866, the right column of the Prussian Army; VAN THILE, the assiduous assistant of BISMARCK at the Chancellery of Foreign Affairs; and last, but not least, Count BERNSTORFF, who has represented the Government of Berlin in London for so many years. The ceremony of installation took place at 1½ in the afternoon. Prince ARTHUR drove to the scene, along with the Crown Prince and Prince LOUIS OF HESSE, in a State carriage, wearing the full robes of the order. The assemblage in the ancient Chapter Room was most brilliant, and altogether such a spectacle was presented as has seldom been witnessed. After the investiture the Chapter was dissolved, and a grand banquet took place in the great hall of the Emperor's Palace, nearly 1,200 guests being present. These all being persons of distinction who have been invested with various orders for services to the State, their decorations and military uniforms presented an exceedingly fine appearance. A second ceremony of an impressive nature now took place. His Majesty embracing each of the new-made Knights as they were presented to him by the youngest Ritters, while the oldest members of the order acted as godfathers to those who had just been installed.

FOREIGN DISASTERS.

Terrible Explosion at Greenwich—A Rain of Chassepot Bullets.

From the London Echo, Nov. 19.

A dreadful explosion occurred last evening at GLADSTONE'S cartridge factory, Greenwich-marshes, by which a large number of girls have been seriously injured. A few weeks ago the Government seized 365 cases of ball-cartridges, each containing twenty pounds weight, which had been manufactured by Mr. H. GLADSTONE for the French Government in the late war; but the English Government had consented to their return, in small quantities on the condition that the powder should be destroyed in a manner by which the ball could be utilized, and yesterday evening a foreman, named SARGENT, and about thirty girls (about sixteen and seventeen years of age) were employed breaking up the cartridges at the factory in question, when, without a moment's notice, a terrific explosion occurred, which was heard for several miles round. Simultaneously with the explosion the girls rushed out of the shed, a great many with their clothes in flames. The least injured ran screaming home through the marshes and tidal ditches, while others were thrown down and rolled in the mud to extinguish the flames. SARGENT, the foreman, and three or four girls were dragged out of the shed with the greatest risk, in consequence of four subsequent explosions occurring within an interval of a quarter of an hour. A cart was obtained from the adjoining farm of Mr. WHEATLEY, in which some of the worst sufferers were conveyed home. The building, which was about 60 feet by 20 feet, was set on fire, the roof blown off, and a portion of the walls knocked down. Five engines of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade, from Greenwich, Deptford, Lewisham, Blackheath and Woolwich attended, extinguished the fire, and rendered essential service by preventing the fire spreading to an adjacent stack of about fifty boxes, containing about 1,000 pounds of ball cartridge. The explosion blackened and disfigured the faces, arms and necks of the girls in a frightful manner. Several were injured by the Chassepot bullets of large size, as supposed, fifty pounds of ball cartridge flying about, and others were wounded by the falling bricks and slates. It is expected that all the thirty girls are more or less injured, and four or five dangerously so. No clear account could be obtained as to the cause of the explosion, but it is rumored that one of the men belonging to the barge which brought the boxes of cartridges down from London imprudently attempted to break up one of the cartridges with a knife, the friction of which ignited the powder.

THE ENGLISH COURTS.

Impaneling of a Jury of Matrons in the Old Bailey.

From the London Globe, Jan. 17.

The scene that was enacted yesterday evening at the Old Bailey, on the occasion of the conviction and sentence of CHRISTIANA EDMUNDS, was one of rare occurrence, and for its romantic ghastliness was almost unexampled, even in the annals of the Newgate Calendar. The old and dingy-looking Court was densely crowded during the reply of SERJEANT BALLANTINE and the summing-up of Baron MARTIN. The prisoner sat unmoved and seemingly unconcerned. A female warder of the prison, who sat behind her in the dock exhibited far more emotion, and looked far more wretched. The prisoner wore no bonnet, but her hair was carefully and even coquettishly arranged in heavy folds across her head. She was dressed neatly, with a black velvet cloak and well-fitting gloves of some dark color. At 3:40 o'clock the jury retired, and were absent for an hour. The prisoner was removed from the dock, but Baron MARTIN retained his seat upon the bench, and the crowd of spectators hardly dreaded during the weary hour of waiting for the verdict. There was much talking and even some laughing, a strange reaction from the enforced silence and the stillness of suspense during the previous hours of the day. The Judge perused the Times, the Sheriffs and the chaplain chatted pleasantly, the members of the bar engaged in learned discussions on the relation of insanity to crime, and in critcisms upon the speeches of counsel and the personal appearance of the beautiful young ladies who sat behind the bar seats; and so the time passed until the return of the jury, when to the buzz of conversation succeeded a solemn stillness, during which the names of the twelve were called over, the unanimous claim of the Assembly, his own best friends loudly deprecating a vote which everybody but himself clearly perceived must go dead against him. That first check ought to have been a sufficient warning for M. THIERS, but the discussion which he carried on throughout the week, far from aiding his recovery, had not even the effect of breaking his fall. Last evening the defeat of the Government was decisive. M. THIERS had been discreet enough to declare at the outset that he would not stake the existence of his Government upon the issue of the debate, though in subsequent interviews with some of the Deputies in the lobbies, he again threatened to make the proposed tax on raw materials a "Cabinet question." It is not easy to see, however, how that expression can apply in this case. The possibility of a rupture between the Sovereign Assembly and the President of the Republic was never foreseen or provided for. Neither M. THIERS nor any other man is empowered to dissolve the Assembly, and the Assembly has declared the authority of M. THIERS coexistent as well as coextensive with its own. The strife is, therefore, between immortal beings—one of those Homeric contests in which the gods of Olympus engage with little dread of the consequences, though they often have to retire badly bruised and roaring lustily. The hostile vote of the Assembly may, indeed, have determined the fall of the Cabinet, or at least of some of its members, but, in the present case, the obnoxious tax on which the dissension arose was not so much the Minister's as the President's measure. It was far more M. THIERS than M. POUYER-QUERTIER who fought for it day after day, and it would hardly be consistent with the character of M. THIERS to screen himself behind the shield of any man's responsibility, and to make the servant bear the penalty of the master's offense. A more grevious offense against plain common sense has, indeed, seldom been perpetrated.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Baron de LABORIE, while crossing the Boulevard Montmartre, was run over, recently, and killed by a laundress's cart. The deceased, aged seventy-two, an Orleanist, was the author of various political writings, and also distinguished as a numismatist.

The population of the little Kingdom of Greece, according to the last census for 1870, amounted to 1,457,894 inhabitants, of which 754,376 were males, and 703,718 females. Comparing the present returns with those of 1860, an increase is shown of 182,515 souls. Athens has a population of 44,510 souls.

The Academy states that AZBELIUS, the venerable collector of Swedish folk songs, died on the 25th of September last, at Enköping, where he had been pastor for forty-nine years. His great work, Svenska Folkets Sagohäfder, was completed in 1870, the last part containing the history of CHARLES XII., since when no true popular legends have come into being.

The Figaro states that official statistics show that between Sept. 17, the date of the investment of Paris, and Jan. 28, the date of the reopening of communications, the number of deaths recorded in the capital was 65,291. The number of the killed in action with the enemy and deaths in the hospitals resulting from wounds was 13,000.

A petition for signature has been drawn up by the numerous friends of Rev. J. SELBY WATSON, praying the Home Secretary to respite the condemned. The grounds on which they urge that his life should be spared are his age and hitherto blameless life. Mr. WATSON, who was still in Newgate jial, maintained the same calm demeanor which has characterized his conduct since his arrest.

The British Medical Journal hears that Prof. HUXLEY's health has given way under the strain of continuous exertion, and that he has been advised to absent himself for a time from all occupation as the best means of restoration. Mr. HUXLEY was to spend two months in the mild climate of Egypt, whither he has repaired; and there is every reason to hope that he will return restored to health and vigor.

A letter from St. Petersburg says: "After the important visits from Berlin, the Court here has had a Slavonic guest from the South—the President of the Montenegrin Senate, M. PETROVITS, a relation of Prince NICHOLAS of Montenegro." The object is stated to be, like that of M. PETROVITS' visit to Vienna, the securing of support for the new roads and other improvements which it is proposed to introduce in Montenegro.

The death is announced of Mr. LEWIS DOXAT, one of the oldest of London journalists. Seventy years ago he became connected with the printing department of one of the London journals, and then with the Morning Chronicle, acting with Mr. PARRY. Afterwards he was editor of the Observer, and conducted that journal during the long period of fifty years. He was eighty-four years of age at the time of his death.

The casket in which the freedom of the City of London is to be presented to the Baroness BURDETT-COUTTS has been made. The box, of which it chiefly consists, is supported by four winged figures emblematic of Prudence, Justice, Temperance and Fortitude, executed with great delicacy and artistic skill. Between the figures the sides of the casket are divided into eight panels, on seven of which are engraved tableaux of the Seven Acts of Mercy. The eighth and centre panel bears the arms and supporters of her Ladyship. The lid is domed and surmounted by the city arms.

The Times of India says that the position of affairs in Abyssinia is not changed since the report of the capture of the Wagshum Gobazie. DEDJAZ KASA is still at Tigre, and it does not appear whether he has resolved to follow up his late victory, although it is stated that he has gained many recruits from the Amhalia (?) country. On the other hand, the fact that nearly all the chiefs about him had been in correspondence with the Wagshum does not seem to indicate a very secure tenure of power, or to augur well for the future peace of the land of Habesh.

The new Madrid periodical, La Voz de España, judges the question of Spanish policy in the West Indies as follows: "Public attention has been seriously called to the words the Ministry have put in the King's mouth in reply to the Cortes with regard to Cuban affairs, (sobre Cuba.) The Epoca sincerely (de buena fé) believes that if the transatlantic provinces are not to be governed by special laws, the termination of the war will be a parenthetical, not an accomplished fact. We even go further—we believe that the Democratic institutions of Cuba and Porto Rico are tantamount to subscribing to their independence. Please to Heaven we may be mistaken!"

Sir H. C. RAWLINSON, President of the Royal Geographical Society, writes: "As rumors of an unfavorable nature in regard to Sir S. BAKER'S expedition to the Upper Nile have been in circulation for some time past, it may be of interest to Sir SAMUEL'S friends and to the public to learn that I have received from Mr. ROGERS, Her Majesty's Consul at Cairo, a telegram to the following effect: 'Cairo, Jan. 17, 1872.—News from BAKER, dated Oct. 8, 1871. Latitude 4 55 degrees North. All Europeans well.' 4 55 degrees North is the exact latitude of Gondokoro, where accordingly we may fix the head-quarters of the expedition three months back."

The Journal Officiel publishes the following announcement: "His Excellency Count ARNIM having delivered on Jan. 9 the letters accrediting him in the character of Ambassador of the Empire of Germany to the French Government, and His Excellency the Vicomte GONTAUT-BIRON having been received by His Majesty the Emperor in the character of Ambassador of France, the diplomatic relations of the two countries are now again placed upon a normal footing. Consequently, the special mission which had been established at the head-quarters of the General-in-Chief of the Army of Occupation has come to an end. All urgent and local questions arising out of the military occupation will in future be dealt with by an extraordinary Commissioner, who will communicate with the head-quarters. Those functions have been intrusted to the Comte DE SAINT VALLIER."

The Calcutta Englishman gives the following intelligence respecting the Looshai expedition: "News has been received from Gen. BOURCHIER to the 23d December, on which day he crossed the junction of the Tepai and Tourchoor. About forty Lushais threatened to oppose the passage, but retired without firing. The troops were all well. Gen. BROWNLOW, writing on the 24th December, reports having destroyed three large villages, containing stores of rice, after only a feeble resistance by the Lushais. One Gurkha had been killed in an ambuscade. On the 23d December Gen. BOURCHIER advanced on Kulell. The Lushais attacked the advance-guard, but were pursued; and two villages—one the residence of the Chief, and containing large stores of grain—were destroyed; a third village was occupied. Two men were killed of the Forty-fourth Regiment, and three of the Twenty-second, and one constable wounded."

The French Institute, at the instance of the Académie Française, has recently awarded to M. GUIZOT the biennial prize of 20,000 francs for his Mémoires and his History of France. M. GUIZOT, in acknowledging the official communication from the Secretary, says, "I am equally proud and grateful for this mark of honor, and I beg you to express to the glorious brotherhood which has for so long a period been pleased to receive me in their ranks the sentiments I entertain for this new evidence of kindly esteem. I have a further request to make. Will you be so good as to submit to the Academy my intention of devoting the amount of the biennial prize to the foundation of a prize to be awarded by the Academy triennially to the best work published within the three preceding years either upon one of the great periods of French literature, from its rise to our present time, or upon the life and works of the great French writers, either prose or poets, philosophers, historians, orators or learned critics."

The military school at St. Cyr has been thrown into a state of great commotion which will probably end in several of the officer-pupils (all the pupils, for the moment, are at least sous-lieutenants) being expelled. They are allowed to come to Paris every Sunday and Wednesday. On Jan 14 a train containing 300 of them was about returning to St. Cyr, when one of their comrades was prevented by the railway officials from getting into it because he had not a proper ticket. He had taken a first class ticket in the morning, and having, nevertheless, been obliged, to travel second class, he maintained that he had a right to return with the same ticket. Out of this trifling affair sprang a scene of the greatest disorder and one of a most disgraceful character. Some of the officers in the train called to their comrade to cut the officials down with his sabre, while others began to smash the carriage-windows, throw the cushions and foot-warmers out on the platform, break the lamps, &c. In short the train was a complete wreck on reaching St. Cyr. The pupils themselves have instituted an inquiry to find out the ringleaders, for, as such a course, the friends of disorder were but a small minority, and they have sent their names to the General at the head of the institution.

Financial Questions in the Assembly—M. Thiers in the Tribune—A Government Defeat.

Paris (Jan. 6) Correspondence of the London Daily News.

In the Assembly today M. THIERS spoke in answer to the speeches of several days past on the great financial question. He began by claiming attention on the ground of the excessive difficulty of his task. All the taxes proposed by Government to meet the terrible situation had been deprecated; individual members had suggested others which they thought better, and now there was perilous uncertainty and confusion. The equilibrium of the budget was the life of the budget. Resources must be found to pay what was owing to the enemy after a disastrous war. It was necessary to saddle the nation with the enormous annual payment of 650,000,000, an amount unprecedented in the history of nations. He did not shut his eyes to the difficulty of this task. It had been said, Why a sinking fund? And it had also been said that the war budget might be diminished. The possible economy on that head would be so insignificant and so dangerous that he would say nothing more about it. But in reply to those who thought it wonderful that he should ask for a sinking fund of 300,000,000 he would say that America had a a sinking fund of 500,000,000. The 300,000,000 which he wanted would be the reserve of the bank, and would get rid of paper money. There was nothing fantastic in the budget. Every item was honest. The schemes of taxation proposed by himself and the Finance Minister after long and most anxious consideration would, he hoped, be accepted. It was not possible to augment direct taxation, which, both in peace and war, was heavier than any other. The tax on real property was already too heavy to be augmented. Already several articles of consumption had been surcharged. The tax on coffee had been brought up from 25,000,000 to 75,000,000; and 41,000,000 extra had been put upon sugar. The new tax on papers was estimated at 60,000,000. But there were still wanting 250,000,000 which were necessary to save the country from ruin, and send the enemy away. To raise this money two courages were necessary—the courage of intellect and the courage of heart. After much research his Government had found that the only available resource was raw materials. He had resisted to the last any tax except the Income tax, but to that he would always say no, at the risk of being called an obstinate old bigot. He had, nevertheless, examined the arguments of the Committee suggesting that resources might be found in the Income tax, and he had not found that anything would be got by it. He also repudiated the proposition to tax securities (valeurs mobilières) for the same reason that he objected to the Income tax, namely, that it was arbitrary. The special tax of three per cent. on raw materials, which the Committee was disposed to admit, would produce only 54,000,000, and was illusory. He insisted upon twenty per cent. He treated as altogether chimerical the theories of M. DESSEILLIGNY, whose speech, however, was attentively listened to by the House. The deliberate opinion of the Government was that there was no other possible resource to meet the crisis but Aino Women—What an Aino Town Looks Like—Fattening Bears for Food—Remarkable Scenes and Incidents—Interesting Notes by the Wayside.

From Our Own Correspondent.

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Friday, Dec. 29, 1871.

My last letter closed with a mention of our first meeting with one of the hairy aborigines of Japan. At this village we stopped for luncheon, and learning that there were some Aino women in the crowd assembled in the street, we went out to see them. We found them very shy and disposed to run away, but we came upon them so suddenly that they made a virtue of necessity and remained sitting. They were good sized, apparently well built and strong, and would have been very good-looking but for their tattooed lips. These they tattoo in the form of a mustache with ends turned up in artistic style, but, strangely enough, the lower lip is the one operated on, and the effect is to make them look very ugly. They wore red silk ear-rings, and the men appeared to be very proud of extravagant ornaments of a similar character.

AINO TOWN AND HABITATIONS.

During the afternoon of this day we arrived at an Aino town on our route. The houses or huts are built of straw, thatched on pole frames, and are without floors or mats, with a place for a wood fire in the centre, the smoke being allowed to find its way out as best it may; consequently everything on the inside was smoked and unclean. Here we saw rudely-shaped fishing spears, snow-shoes, bows and arrows, skins of deers, bears and badgers; portions of fish-nets; some beans, millet, sea-weed, &c. Adjoining each of the largest sized houses, we found a straw store-house, built on posts, its bottom several feet above the ground, evidently to keep its contents from contact with dampness, and to secure it against rats and foxes.

THE AINOS' PIGS.

We found a number of bears in pole cages here, who made some alarming demonstrations at our approach. Through our interpreter we learned that the Ainos, upon finding a bear tree, observe it until the she bear has young, when they at once kill the old one and bring away the cubs, in some instances so very young that the women suckle them. They are then confined in cages and fattened, to be subsequently slaughtered when they have become so old and strong as to be dangerous. The fact that they mount the bears' skulls on poles in front of their houses, and go through some certain ceremonials when they slaughter those they raise, has led to the belief on the part of the Japanese that they worship the bear. I do not think that this is at all true, but I believe that this display is made out of pride, as an Indian would hang scalps on his wigwam, merely to prove his prowess.

SUPPOSED RELIGION OF THE AINOS.

Through the Governor at Saltsporo, we endeavored to gain some knowledge about the religion, habits and history of these people. He informed us that they worship the mysterious, that is, whatever they cannot understand in man or nature, and that those bear skulls, when bleached in the sun and weather, are used as mirrors. An Aino, feeling conscience-stricken on account of some wrong he has committed, observes himself in one of these skulls, and imagines he sees reflected there—first, his own likeness, then the wrong he has done, and, finally, the redress that he should make, and, governed by that vision, at once proceeds to make such redress. This information, however, must be received with great caution, for the Japanese do not respect or care enough about the Ainos to have ever exerted themselves to find out very much about their customs or opinions, and also because the Ainos dislike the Japanese so much that they probably mislead them on many matters.

AINO CHILDREN AND OLD MEN.

All the entire Aino Community, when they found they were allowed to do so, came out and observed us. Many of the men we found to be very hairy on such portions of their bodies as were exposed. The women were very wild and shy, all of them bearing the regulation tattoo. The children were bright-eyed, robust and pleasant, acknowledging the simplest gifts with full and beaming expressions of gratitude, as if it were indeed a wonderful thing for them to have presents bestowed. The children looked very intellectual and would compare very favorably with urchins of the same age anywhere in Europe or America. Many old men were here bowed with age, and with long, silvery beards sweeping their breasts. All received us kindly and courteously, accepting our little presents with great gusto, and seemingly desirous for us to tarry longer. It was also evident that they were delighted to see that we wore beards, and one of our number, who had a very full and very black beard, apparently became an object of their greatest regard.

A REMARKABLY HAIRY SPECIMEN.

All were dressed with skins or gowns so as to conceal nearly all of their persons, but during the day we obtained a full view for a long time of one old fellow in a boat who was almost naked, and he was indeed very hairy. His beard reached to his waist, straight and thick, and all over his person, even on his back, shoulders and thighs, the hair was seemingly as long, thick and black as that on a buffalo; but of course he was an exception to the rule.

CURIOUS FACTS.

We saw in different places about their villages little rows of sticks stuck in the ground shaved upward with the shavings left pendent. These we were informed were their places of worship. At Saltsporo the Governor, in discussion with us about these people, told us that they had no histories or even legends; that when one of their number died they rolled the body in a mat and buried it lying on its side, burned the residence of the deceased, and never afterward alluded in any way to that person, it being considered dangerous to the safety alike of the spirit of the deceased and to themselves to do so. He stated also that they had no ideas of time, not even knowing their own ages. That the number of Ainos on the Island of Yesso was about fifteen thousand; but this information is, beyond doubt, wholly unauthentic, as the Japanese occupation of this island, until very recently, has been confined to a few ports on the extreme south coast, and even now, with the exception of Saltsporo and the line of the roads leading to it, it is limited to the shores of the island about half way up on each side from Hakodadi.

THE AINOS UNSUBDUED.

The great interior is yet the domain of the Aino, unsubdued, in all his original savageness. He there still roams, hunts, fishes, worships his whittled sticks, strokes his beard, plays with his pet bears, badgers and foxes, and tattoops his wife to his heart's content.

The Governor further informed us that murder is a crime unknown among these primitive people; that the greatest punishment that could be inflicted upon an Aino would be to cut off his beard; that the women are remarkably chaste, and adultery severely punished; that one man is allowed but one wife, and she is not subject to any undue amount of labor, and in her turn she submits in the old patriarchal style to the leadership, love and protection of her lord, with no apparent aspirations to grasp greater powers. From what I saw of these people I am convinced that they are susceptible of a high degree of moral culture; that in disposition they are tractable and kind; that were it not for their wild mode of life, living as they do on the results of the chase, they cannot be truly called savages. These people are very numerous, not only in Yesso but in Saghalia and all of the adjacent islands.

THEIR SKILL AS HUNTERS.

We hunted with them as guides, and found them to be as bold riders as the Arab, as quick-sighted and foot-footed as the American Indian, splendid shots with the gun and arrow, and perfectly trustworthy as companions. I visited a great number of their villages, in many of which there were but four Japanese, and in all cases they appeared to be well provided with food—fish, deer and bear meat—and I saw few instances of suffering from any sickness or disease.

AN AINO DANCE.

On the west coast, during our homeward journey, the Governor, who had accompanied us for two days, managed to let us see an Aino dance. We seated ourselves in our tea-houses; the sliding doors on one side were all removed, and the Ainos, under a Japanese officer, assembled in a little yard adjacent, and were directed to dance and sing for our entertainment. The feast commenced by a generous distribution of saki (rice whisky) to them to warm them up to their work. They drank prodigious quantities of this before manifesting any excitement, but when it began to work they cut some eccentric capers in a wild style, singing songs that appeared to have been buried for a long time low down in their stomachs. Their dance consisted of hopping, bowing, clapping their hands together and then striking their thighs and breasts. One of their songs was translated to us, when it appeared to be a song of thanks to the Japanese, from whom they had learned how to make saki, and were wonderfully indebted for such civilizing influences. During the singular performance they imitated birds and beasts quite well.

In drinking they were provided with peculiar-shaped sticks; these they laid first across the bowl, then raised the whole to their foreheads, bowing their obligations; then, taking the stick and delicately dipping one end of it in the liquor, they cast a little out to the ground, saying, "This is to the earth;" then a little more was thrown upward with the remark, "This is to the sky;" again another such a libation, saying, "This is to our rulers;" and then, lastly, "This is to ourselves." Then, using this same wand or stick to carefully part their mustaches, they drink with the stick placed carefully across the bowl, repeating the ceremony with every fresh draught. We felt conscience-stricken at having been instrumental in inflicting upon these poor wretches the duty of indulging in such a drunken orgie as this proved to be, and imagined, from the amount of liquor that they drank, that they would be "off duty" for a week; but early next morning, when we rode out of town, we found them all apparently in the best of spirits, waiting to see us properly off on our journey.

THE ZOOLOGICAL FORMATION OF YESSO.

On the line of the east coast I noticed in many places large deposits of iron sand on the beach, and picked up a few quartz pebbles which were considered strong indications of there being gold in the mountains. In places where the shore was not rocky, but still precipitous, another stratification of the earth was disclosed, in which I found sea-shells imbedded in the clay of the solid mountain one hundred or more feet below the surface, thus indicating its marine formation and upheaval.

On our fifth day out we reached a place called Sull's Carry, a solitary house by the sea, and at the foot of a very high and steep mountain that here ended in a precipitous cliff of great beauty overhanging the water. Here we were compelled to abandon the beach and climb over the mountain. On the way we saw tracks and other signs of bear very fresh. After arriving at our resting place for the night we learned that the bears at that point were destroying the horses of the people and committing great depredations.

TRAVELING IN A JUNK.

The next day's journey we made mainly in a junk, rowed for a long time by Ainos, until a fine breeze sprung up and relieved them. It was a curious scene to behold those wild, long-bearded fellows, (an exact picture of first-class theatrical pirates,) singing to their oars, and chanting a wild and not unmusical song.

That night we remained at a place called Rosa, near the foot of another volcano called Oosa. This we at once ascended, having to tear our way with our Aino guides through a very dense growth of brush in a cotton-wood forest, until at last we reached the steep side of the mountain proper, and then ascended by a most toilsome march in débris, sinking at each step to our ankles until we reached the edge of the crater. We found it to be an immense opening, circular in form, as near as we could judge, and about a mile in diameter. Within this circle were two rugged peaks that appeared to have withstood time and the fury of the flames, and to still be the theatre of the continued conflagration. They were even then emitting smoke and steam in huge volumes. These peaks we could not, of course, reach or ascend. Beyond, and in plain view, was an immense lake also called Oosa, and within this was a most beautiful and symmetrical island in the form of a sugar-loaf. From our stand-point on the mountain our view was sublime, as the day was fine and the atmosphere very clear. Volcano Bay stretching away on the one hand, with its surf beating loudly at the base of the mountain on which we stood, whilst inland, Yesso, with its rugged face of high mountain and dark defile, seemed sleeping under its deep forests.

A BUDDIST TEMPLE.

Descending again to the village, we called at a Buddist temple, the first I had met since leaving Hakodadi. It was beautifully situated in a deep grove, and was very large and inviting. Here, for the first and only time since our arrival in Japan, we beheld the Tycoon's crest hung out. I had not supposed such an exhibition to be at all allowable. We expressed a desire to enter, and were at once shown in and invited to a seat on the matted floor in front of the altar, where we were surrounded by a bevy of shaven priests, who came to greet us dressed in full canonicals. The main and side altars were gorgeously arrayed with golden lotus leaves, candelebras in bronze and gold, censor vases, and images of gods and minor deities.

Minister DE LONG having placed a little money before one of the gods, the hearts of the priests were unlocked, so they lighted up the altar and temple in a blaze of light, ordered tea and candies, and told us the history of the temple and the volcano. Finally, they unrobed for our barbarian eyes a veiled image, evidently to be looked upon only by the most godly. We well understood, by the immediate prostration of our guard and officers, that they had disclosed their most sacred idol, and we felt complimented accordingly.

All the time we had little plates of rice, potatoes, fish, &c., sitting before them, and to our horror we observed our dog quietly robbing one of the most prudish-looking of them all of his rations. Before we could interfere and apologise, one of the priests approached the dog, took another plate of food from another god, called Caro to him, and offered him the food of his dinner.

From this priest we learned that the temple was built sixty-eight years ago and that the volcano underwent a terrible eruption about fifty years ago, destroying a great deal of the surrounding country and causing many deaths. Since then it has thrown seven or eight years it has been subject to slight eruptions, and is constantly burning. That night the priest sent Minister DE LONG a pot of brown sugar. Mr. DE LONG returned the compliment with a bottle of brandy and a can of peaches, not knowing what else to send. We shall always wonder what they thought of such a gift.

Street Paving.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

There is one way of imposing upon taxpayers that under the old law of assessment has become common, and which has not received the attention it should. To illustrate what is meant, the writer will quote a case in point, which is but one of hundreds, though not always referring to the same form of taxation. In the statutes regulating the paving of City streets, it is held that a street once paved by contract and taxed upon property, cannot be again taxed upon the same property for a second and different pavement within a certain limit of time; but, disregarding this law and the protests of owners, pavements have been removed and new ones laid down. This has just been done on the Fifth-avenue, above Fifty-ninth-street, owners being assessed, with a full knowledge of the illegality of the proceeding, the assessment, of course, becoming a lien upon the property until vacated or paid off. Shortly appears the representative of some well-known firm of attorneys, who can, for the little consideration of twenty-five per cent. of the sum assessed, have the incumbrance removed; and this the frightened real estate owners, not knowing where the "little joker" is, consents to. This is repeated, again and again, and, under the management of the authorities has become a regular system of robbery and extortion.

Tidings from Rome—Politics in Artist Life—A Word for Artists—American Painters and Sculptors—Mr. Tilton's Achievements.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Tuesday, Jan. 2, 1872.

It is a subject of conjecture what effect political changes are to have upon the artist life of Rome. Beside the Italian artists several hundred painters and sculptors from foreign countries have found this the most convenient place for practicing their art. There is inspiration in the atmosphere, and so many artists together create sympathies for each other, and form their own moral and social tone. In the point of view of profit, for the sculptors particularly, great advantages are found. Here, material to facilitate processes, is everywhere at hand, and the marble of which the statue is made, is in the home market. The models, whether in the living flesh, or in the more perfect ideals of the galleries, may be studied without going far, and at the smallest cost; and the best-trained workmen are ready to undertake the slow and wearisome labor of execution. The sculptor who has a commission may reckon his large profits at leisure. Considerable alarm has lately been felt because an export tax upon the works of foreign artists resident here has once more been talked about. As high as thirty per cent. has been named; and if such an impost should be put on, if it should not lead to the ruin of the interests of the foreign artists, it will, at least, have for result to make Rome and Florence no longer the paradise for artists which they so long have been. Many painters and sculptors would be obliged to leave Italy altogether.

A WORD FOR ARTISTS.

It is our duty to give praise and sympathy to those who are creating the beauty which nourishes our souls. While we would not look upon artists with a sentimental regard, or exalt them unduly, we must always recognize art as an educator of the higher life. We do not forget that most painters and sculptors are following a profession, and seeking as eagerly to make their art a source of enrichment, as any others who happen to be the possessors of superior skill. Unfortunately we have but too many proofs that works of art of no merit worthy to be recognized are thrust upon the market like the commonest merchandise, rendering less service than many articles of the most vulgar utility.

LARGE DISCOVERY OF PAINTINGS.

It has lately come to the knowledge of the public that there are stored in the garrets of the vast Palazzo Vecchio in Florence more than six thousand pictures. They were accumulated, for the most part, in the time of the MEDICI, or during two centuries of that absolute rule. The number is sufficient to cover the walls of half the galleries of the world. As to the quality, we have yet no trustworthy account. Some agent who has at his command a portion of the revenue of an American city or State might, after making inquiries, find it worth while to come out here and obtain permission to sift what good grain he can from this great store-house of chaff. So far as we can learn, it was the habit of the artists in the time of the MEDICI, who were liberal patrons of the arts, to offer to them for purchase, everything worthy of the slightest notice that was produced. Those Princes kept agents authorized to examine and pronounce upon the quality of whatever was offered, and to hand over to the artists such sums in ready money as at the time they might need. Hence, probably, the origin of the term "patronizing" artists. It may be well that the practice is pretty well done away with in our day, for most buyers of pictures and statues wish to get their money's worth, and although often little taste or knowledge is shown, we are at least saved from the accumulation of the rubbish of an indiscriminate and charitable "patronage."

AMERICAN ARTISTS.

So far as American art in Rome is concerned, I find by the posted up list that the number of painters and sculptors resident here is between thirty and forty—or about the same as during the past fifteen years. The oldest of them date their Roman exile—of sweet memories—as far back as five-and-twenty or thirty years. It is not unkind to indulge the suspicion that they no longer have any desire to go home. With the national banner in their houses, and often flung from their windows on days of Italian festa, they carry America with them; and with a daily knowledge of passing events Rome has become but a suburb of one of the transatlantic cities, and is joined to them by growing interests. Among the artists in Rome in whose works a constant improvement is noticeable, Mr. TILTON deserves conspicuous mention. Pains-taking thought, aspiration after an elevated ideal, and the devotion which does not shrink from any labor necessary to reach a desired result, are the qualities which give us assurance of a true artist. Neither the painter, nor any one who loves art with genuine feeling, can easily grow tired of the scenes of natural beauty, of which Italy, and particularly the Roman campagna, furnish such an inexhaustible variety. These scenes have been painted so often that to many their freshness is nearly worn out, and only an artist of uncommon ability has the power to keep alive that poetic charm, which the eye, not less than the imagination, craves. Mr. TILTON has done nearly all that power of color inspired by a poetic fancy can accomplish. A little while ago both the artist and his friends thought that the subtle influences of the landscape, and sky, and atmosphere of Italy had exhausted their power of quickening, and carrying forward a further development. The genial glow of the sun, and sky, and golden atmosphere of the East, had been dreamt of, and a year ago the time came for turning into objective experiences the delicious, subjective unrealities of the long-drawn dream. Mr. TILTON brought back with him from the Nile so great a number of sketches that they must furnish the store from which he can draw for many years. A new world has been opened, and a new revelation of beauty, to stimulate the artist to labor with higher hope and enjoyment. The promise of the future we find in the freshness and vigor of the Egyptian sketches in water color; for only two pictures in oil have as yet been begun. These have been commissioned by Mr. CARTER BROWN and Mr. ROBERT GODDARD, both of Providence. The subjects selected are the great ruins of Comombo and Dendera, among the most imposing on the Nile. As the scene is quickened into vitality by the hand of the painter, the life of the East rises before us, and the mind is carried back through the vast periods of thousands of years of a pre-historic past. Egypt can never furnish the scenes of nature and life in the picturesque variety and beauty which the artist has found in Italy. Nor is there, in the history or life of the East, so much that appeals to the artist's sympathies. But with modern means of movement the painter has the whole world for his field, and from the heart of the Andes to the interior of Asia and the sources of the Nile, the transition is but a step. When the awful heights of the Himalayas have been spainted, there will remain those regions of inexpressible grandeur and desolation, the half-explored world of Arctic ice. The semi-Oriental characteristics of Venice have given Mr. TILTON the materials for some of his best pictures. The theme is old, but it has inspired many an art-epic of exquisite beauty. The color of Venice carries us—but not with an abrupt transition—from Italy to the East. The Asiatic traffic brought back wealth of decorative form, as well as treasures of commercial gain; and the stains of four or five centuries have added the tints which give the last grace to the model from which the painter creates or marks out his perfected ideal. The artist must grow, or sink into the monotony of a tiresome repetition of himself. A result of Mr. TILTON'S visit to the East is greater clearness of insight and breadth of feeling, for these are already perceived in his works. Only by love and devotion are the magic secrets, of which nature has such an inexhaustible store, found out, and their charm felt.

With us landscape art seems to be steadily rising to a more and more respectable position. A great nation, with no genius capable of putting on canvas a visible representation of any of the noble passages of its story, or, in other words, painting the human figure and placing it in historical relations, is contenting itself for the present with representing the scenes of nature—which is the back-ground of history, or the theatre upon which history is acted—and representing them so well as to win general praise.

Concha vs. Valmaseda—Lively Lobbying Across the Atlantic by Cable—Absurd Reports About Cuban Leaders—Grave of the Spanish Army—A Four-Year-Old Volunteer, but a Prince—Miscellaneous.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, Jan. 20, 1872.

The Concha party, which was so sanguine of success, and had already "sold the bear's skin" in anticipation in making out the political shade and the offices to be filled by its partisans, has met with a disastrous and unexpected defeat at the last moment. The partisans of VALMASEDA were too strong and too numerous, and employed the weapon so freely used by the Conchistas, a liberal disbursement of money in Spain, with signal advantage. Telegram followed telegram to Madrid, directed to the President of the Ministry, to ADELARDO LOPEZ DE AYALA, EX-Minister of the Colonies, and to about a dozen different journals in Madrid. Prominent Conchistas also forwarded cypher telegrams advising their partisans in Spain to desist from pushing their candidate, as the majority of the people were in favor of VALMASEDA, and that a conflict between the two parties was imminent. The Volunteer Colonels were in a majority for VALMASEDA, the Conchistas consisting of Col. JULIAN ZULUETA, of the Second; Col. RAMON HERRERA, of the Fifth; Col. MIGUEL A. HERRERA, of the Third, and Col. MARTINEZ RICO, of the Seventh Battalion; those of the First, Fourth and Sixth Infantry, First and Second Riflemen, First and Second Artillery, First and Second Cavalry, the Engineers, and Hussars, and those from Regla, Guanabacoa, Casa Blanca and Marianas being Valmasedistas, or fourteen against four. On Monday the telegrams came assuring the Valmasedistas that their man would remain, and they set to work immediately organizing a grand serenade, which was given the same evening, and at which even the Conchista Colonels assisted. On the following morning VALMASEDA left by way of Batabano for the south coast of the Island, and is now taking all available forces from the Cinco Villas to operate in the Central and Eastern Departments. On Thursday the third of the four regular battalions of Riflemen from Spain arrived here and were received by the volunteers, who gave the officers and men a dinner and presented them with cigars. These new arrivals leave for the Central Department tomorrow, and the report that some of them would remain here to do garrison duty is therefore exploded.

MOVEMENTS OF CUBAN LEADERS.

The week has been productive of curious reports regarding prominent Cubans. The story of CESPEDES having arrived at Jamaica is true, but the Jamaica in question is not the Island of Jamaica, but the township of Jamaica, near Guantanamo, about fifty miles from Santiago de Cuba. The story of the flight of MACEO, who was reported to have accompanied CESPEDES, is also untrue, as this gentleman, in the disguise of a Roman Catholic priest, was in the town of Santiago de Cuba, conferring with secret agents of the Spanish and prominent partisans of the Cuban Government, only seventeen days ago. The flight of PIO ROSADO, a brother of CESPEDES, and of ENRIQUE COLLAZO, to Jamaica, is announced in a telegram from Kingston noticing their arrival. PIO ROSADO is the Ex-Santiago de Cuba schoolmaster, who, in a full Cuban General's uniform, entered that city with sword, hat and an enormous cockade, and presented himself before the Spanish General, GARCIA MUNOZ, in command there, and protested against the barbarous manner in which the war was carried on by the Spaniards. Gen. GARCIA made him take his cockade off his hat, and the volunteers were preparing to kill him, but the General had received him as an envoy, and had ROSADO accompanied outside of the lines by two of his Adjudants. This was considered at the time one of the most daring and foolhardy missions undertaken by a Cuban, although it was known that once within the Spanish lines they would respect him.

GRAVE OF THE SPANISH ARMY.

Since the outbreak of the revolution, in October, 1868, Spain has sent 110,000 men to Cuba. About two-thirds of this number have died. War matters are at a stand still; a few surrenders and an occasional skirmish. That famous individual, GONZALBS BOET, has given signs of life by blowing his own horn through the papers. The Cuban Col. RAMON HERNANDEZ was killed near Guaimaro.

THE BONES OF COLUMBUS.

The new cemetery projected for over fifteen years, and where people are buried already, but which has neither wall, nor fence, nor decent road leading to it, will be called the Cristobal Colon (Christopher Columbus) Cemetery, and the ashes of that gentleman, now in the Havana Cathedral, are to transferred to the cemetery bearing his name, and placed under a superb monument. It will be many years before this plan will be realized, and the Havana Bishop, who gives all orders and makes all changes in his bishopric, taking also good care to collect his revenue, while residing abroad, will not hurry up this work, because he cannot make any profit by it.

A ROYAL VOLUNTEER.

The volunteers of this city, especially the Fourth Company of the Second Battalion, have just received a strong reinforcement in the person of his Serene Highness the Prince of Asturias. Mr. MANUEL FILIBERTO DE SAVOY, son of AMADEUS, and about four years of age, who was proposed and elected as a distinguished member of that company. This new volunteer is all right, and he may enter the Havana University with less risk than other young men, as his connection with the volunteers may save him from being shot or sent to the Penitentiary.

DOUBLE ASSASSINATION.

Mr. ANTONIO M. RUIZ, the Mayor of Remedios, and his colored servant boy, thirteen years of age, were assassinated on the 11th by persons unknown. Mr. RUIZ was first strangled with a rope and the head then cut off with a knife. The mulatto boy was killed with a knife. Opinions differ as to the cause of the murder, some asserting that it was done for robbery, while others say politics were at the bottom of the affair. The former is the more likely, as Mr. RUIZ was a very wealthy man, and always had large sums of money with him, none of which was found.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Havana City Council is ready to receive propositions offering to loan the city $2,250,000, with which to pay the present stockholders of the gas company, and run the gas-works hereafter for account of the city. Solfar nobody has made any offer....Not a single Havana journal knew who JAMES FISK, Jr., was. The Voz, in mentioning his death, says: "He was probably one of those persons who lately figured in the scandalous abuses of the municipality of the State of New-York," and calls him also a certain Mr. FISK. Such is fame.

CARDENAS.

Capt. TIBBETS, of the American brig Torrent, arrived on the 16th, and reports having seen a brig ashore on the 10th instant on the north-east point of Abaco. The Captain was not close enough to ascertain the name of the wrecked vessel. The Custom-house authorities here have retained in their possession several cases of medicine consigned to Mr. CAHILL, an American druggist, the only one established in the island. The different officials and proprietors of opposition establishments have used the Government inspector to act against the poor druggist, whose only fault seems to be that he is an American, and fails to offer the customary bribe. As our Consuls are of so little use, Mr. CAHILL will have to wait until the higher authorities take the case in hand and do him justice. Mr. ADOLFO D. VARGAS, the cashier of Mr. HENRY TREAT, an American merchant of this city, has absconded with $10,000 of his employer's money. It is supposed that he has gone to New-York.
